| PAF     | 545         | Organizations, Sustainability & Public Policy  | Sustainability concerns are fast becoming a strategic issue for organizations in all sectors. In the last ten years, numerous organizations have completely redefined their business strategies in line with principles of sustainability by balancing the requirements for economic development, environmental quality and social justice, and governments worldwide are developing programs and policies that encourage these activities. Explores the connections between organization strategy--especially within the private sector, sustainability and public policy. Through a combination of practical cases, readings and lectures, class sessions engage students in discussions aimed at developing sustainability assessment models. Additionally, students apply new strategy tools that incorporate principles of proactive environmental management and social responsibility designed to enhance the public good. | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Col of Pub Serv & Comm Solutns | School of Public Affairs | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): Degree- or Nondegree-seeking graduate; Credit is allowed for only PAF or SOS 545                                      |

| PAF     | 570         | Microeconomics of Public Policy II                | Provides the policy tools to solve economic problems such as market concentrations, market failures and externalities, and asymmetric information. Increasingly, government interventions are moving away from a command-and-control-style of direct provision of goods and services and toward a large menu of indirect approaches implemented through a complex system of third-party actors. Government intervention in private markets now entails loans and loan guarantees, grants-in-aid, contracts, vouchers, social and economic regulation, and many other policy tools. Each of these instruments involves vastly different behavioral distortions, policy technologies, political considerations and technical sophistication. Analyzes the economics of four policy interventions: grants, tax expenditures, social regulation and vouchers. Provides an overview of each tool (including its key design features) and combines economic theory with background information on how public policies actually operate. | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Col of Pub Serv & Comm Solutns | School of Public Affairs | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): PAF 504 with C or better                      |

| PAF     | 582         | E-Public Administration                           | Explores how new techniques and technologies for using, processing and managing information are changing how we interact, work and serve. As an example of this very concept, this course is offered online. During the semester, managers explore current trends, use a wide variety of information and communication tools, and have manager-created content consistent with new trends of online participation. By the end of the course, managers have experience with tools (including Wikis, Blogs, search engines, collaboration tools, reputation systems, social networks, virtual worlds); are familiar with current information issues (transparency, privacy, equal access, governance); and explore how they are relevant to a variety of contexts (local government, non-profits, public service).  | N                 | SEM               | N               | GNA           | Col of Pub Serv & Comm Solutns | School of Public Affairs | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student |

| PAF     | 585         | Strategic Planning for Public Sector Leaders      | In an age of diminishing resources, the tools of strategic planning have become crucial for every public sector and non-profit manager. How can a public sector agency (or non-governmental organization) achieve its goals and advance its mission? How can it motivate its people given the absence of the sorts of incentives often found in the private sector? How can these organizations respond to a rapidly changing political, economic and social environment? These are among the questions that are addressed.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Col of Pub Serv & Comm Solutns | School of Public Affairs | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student |
| PAF     | 586         | Data Analytics for the Public Good                | Explores techniques used for data extraction, analysis and visualization. In particular, students engage with social media data, devise solutions to address data-poor scenarios, and explore the potential of sentiment analyses to elucidate opinion trends and predict future attitude shifts. Discusses data visualization techniques and engages students with Tableau software. Also explores the social, political and ethical considerations associated with building and managing data analytics programs in the public sphere. Explores issues-critical dilemmas when it comes to issues such as data privacy, data protection, predictive analytics, personalized service delivery and resource provision, algorithmic regulation, and large-scale data analytics for administrative efficiencies and resource management optimization, among others.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Col of Pub Serv & Comm Solutns | School of Public Affairs | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student |

| PAF     | 587         | Federal Budgeting and Tax Policy                               | Provides a broad understanding of federal budget and tax policy issues. The knowledge acquired in this class enable students to act as competent parties in the formulation of public policy within the federal budget and tax policy domains. Approximately one half of the class is devoted to federal budget processes and concepts including purposes, coverage, scoring, performance evaluation and proposed options for reform. The second half covers tax policy issues. Throughout the course, focuses on those budget and tax policy issues that are the current subject of political attention.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Col of Pub Serv & Comm Solutns | School of Public Affairs | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student |
| PAF     | 588         | Global Public Policy   | The study of public policy has traditionally focused on the operations of government agencies within national borders. Increasingly, however, public officials at all levels of government must confront challenges and opportunities that exist across borders. Whether the issue is immigration, national security, trade and finance, or the environment, public managers must be aware of global pressures and, in many cases, respond to them. This course gives managers the analytical tools to understand how global issues are currently being managed and what they might do to make the most of global opportunities.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Col of Pub Serv & Comm Solutns | School of Public Affairs | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student |

| PAF     | 601         | Advanced Public Policy Seminar                                 | This advanced seminar in public policy has a single objective: to develop a critical thinking of theoretical perspectives developed to analyze several dimensions of public policy. Focuses on theories and perspectives across specific policy areas since the objective is to get used to analytical lenses, not a specific policy area. This objective is achieved by reading required books each week. This class requires the ability to critically analyze a body of literature as a prerequisite for advancing that literature. The general format of this course includes reviews of class material and discussion. Prior to each class, students are expected to read the required books listed in the syllabus. Students are responsible for contents included in the readings, even if it is not explicitly reviewed in class.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Col of Pub Serv & Comm Solutns | School of Public Affairs | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student |
| PAF     | 602         | Advanced Research Design for Public Policy and Management      | The logic, design and conduct of applied social research for students interested in public management and policy. Traditional scientific explanatory research is a necessary prerequisite for any prescriptive research. The primary orientation of this course is to focus on development of social science explanations for public administrative phenomena and the development of research designs which permit testing of hypotheses derived from these explanations.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Col of Pub Serv & Comm Solutns | School of Public Affairs | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): admission to a doctoral program               |
| PAF     | 603         | Advanced Economics for Public Administration and Public Policy | Theory of utility and demand, theory of the producer, organization, operation of product and factor markets, market equilibrium, regulation, risk and uncertainty, general equilibrium and welfare policy, market failure, public goods and taxation, and game theory.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Col of Pub Serv & Comm Solutns | School of Public Affairs | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): PAF 504 with C or better; doctoral major      |
| PAF     | 604         | Intellectual Foundations of Public Administration              | Explores significant developments and themes in the theory of public administration, especially American public administration. Major foci in this seminar include the historical development of public administration as a body of thought and as a theory of politics; the enduring theme of public administration and democracy; various possible unifying themes, theories, and criteria; and prospects for future theory and research. Aimed at encouraging advanced students to refine their abilities to identify, analyze, interpret, critique, evaluate, and contribute to the literature and intellectual developments of this field of scholarship, as well as to place current and emerging trends in broader context. Builds on more basic courses in public administration and is intended in part to assist students in preparation for doctoral preliminary examinations in public administration. Assumes that students have a solid understanding of American government and bureaucracy. | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Col of Pub Serv & Comm Solutns | School of Public Affairs | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): admission to a doctoral program               |
| PAF     | 605         | Organization Theory and Behavior Seminar                       | Advanced survey of organization theory (OT) and organization behavior (OB) literatures for doctoral students. The seminar pursues multiple goals. It examines the intellectual foundations and historical progression of OT/OB research and explores the craft of conducting social science research related to OT/OB. Specifically analyzes how current literature in public management and administration applies organization theory for research. Develops a research-based understanding of main schools of organization theory so that students gain skills to enable them to engage OT/OB theories in their own research.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Col of Pub Serv & Comm Solutns | School of Public Affairs | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): admission to doctoral program                 |

| PBH     | 355         | Research Methods for Public Health      | Society incurs high opportunity costs when public health interventions which yield a high health return on investment are not implemented, or when resources are expended on interventions with low health returns. Public health practitioners should, therefore, incorporate the best scientific evidence in planning, implementing and evaluating public health policies and programs. Covers concepts and tools of public health research where the research objective is to provide evidence that informs and improves decisions regarding the allocation of public health resources. Covers basic components that inform evidence-based decision making, namely: accessing the best available scientific evidence; developing research questions, collecting and analyzing qualitative and quantitative data; using data and information systems methodically; and adhering to standards of ethical research.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | College of Health Solutions   | School of Nutrition and Health Promotion | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): PBH 310; not open to Exercise and Wellness or Health Education and Health Promotion majors                             |

| PBH     | 455         | Public Health Program Evaluation        | Federal, state and local policies shape the nature of the public health programs implemented in communities. Public health professionals are often responsible for evaluating, at multiple levels, the programs that result from such policies. Provides public health students with the analytical tools necessary to manage the implementation and evaluation of public health programs. Program evaluation serves many important functions. It supplies information to managers who are charged with implementing public health programs and to policymakers who face decisions about which programs to fund, scale back, expand, modify or eliminate. Evaluation is an accountability tool: when a public health agency decides to finance a program, they have a right to ask what their funds bought. Evaluation is also a vehicle for improving public health programs. By identifying what works and what does not--and how new programs fare relative to existing practice--policymakers and managers can improve program designs. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | College of Health Solutions   | School of Nutrition and Health Promotion | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): PBH 355  |

| PHI     | 303         | The Future of Religions               | Critical theorists of modern religious and secular beliefs argued that both theism and atheism have had their martyrs and tyrants. Nietzsche proclaimed "God" of the West dead, Marx unmasked religion as opium for the oppressed masses, and Freud analyzed religious future as an unconscious illusion. The future of secular progress has become equally suspect in the wake of the Holocaust, Hiroshima, the gulags, the killing fields of Cambodia, Rwanda. Globally motivated terror revealed itself as capable of religious as much secular justifications. The future of faith and reason has become a doubly open theoretical and practical question in philosophy, religious studies, literary study, critical theory, cultural and gender studies, and all sciences. Applies theoretical and methodological tools to critically exam beliefs, practices, and communities and their role in both generating and transforming the ethical and spiritual discontents of the global age. | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | New Interdis Arts & Sciences  | School of Humanities, Arts, and Cultural Studies   | 3     | L or HU         | Pre-requisites: ENG 102, 105 or 108 with C or better; Credit is allowed for only HON 394 (The Future of Religions), PHI 303 or REL 300 |

| PHI     | 411         | Continental Philosophy                             | Contemporary European thought emerges out of a crisis of the Enlightenment that unfolds throughout the 19th and 20th centuries. Kant's critique of the theoretical, practical, aesthetic and religious foundations articulates this crisis in Western philosophy, society and culture. Explores Continental thinkers and schools of thought in light of Kant's understanding of this crisis. Figures might be Nietzsche, Marx, Freud, Kierkegaard, Husserl, Heidegger, Benjamin, Adorno, Marcuse, Sartre, de Beauvoir, Irigaray, Kristeva, Spivak, Habermas, Lévinas, Marion, Derrida and others. Schools of thought considered may include existentialism, phenomenology, hermeneutics, critical theory, poststructuralism, deconstruction, feminist theory, critical race theory, postcolonial theory, and comparative philosophy. Continental philosophy dovetails with other fields like communication, cultural studies, law, political science, religious studies, literature and various social sciences. | N                 | LEC               | Y               | OPT           | New Interdis Arts & Sciences | School of Humanities, Arts, and Cultural Studies   | 3     | HU              | Prerequisite(s): ENG 102 or 105 or 108 with C or better; minimum 30 hours. | PHI     | 412         | Philosophy and Literary Criticism                  | Explores dynamic tensions between philosophical and literary critical approaches to texts. Aims to identify distinct ways that literature and critical practices "philosophize" about truth, moral dilemmas or existential struggles. Probes the challenges that each form of inquiry, philosophical and critical, poses for the other. Seeks to enhance understanding of the philosophical underpinnings of key literary works. May address poetry, novels and other media.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | New Interdis Arts & Sciences | School of Humanities, Arts, and Cultural Studies   | 3     | HU              | Prerequisite(s): ENG 101 or 105 or 107 with C or better; minimum 30 hours. | PHY     | 118         | Explorations in Science Teaching                 | Examines the field of physical science education via in-class meetings and classroom settings. Discusses the theory, pedagogy and practice of teaching physical science. Reviews various curricula available for the teaching of physical science with a focus on state and national standards. Students work with course instructor(s) to design three lessons that work toward some of the objectives of each cooperating teachers' class. Students are aided in developing materials, guided in planning to teach the lesson, and given time to prepare and practice the lesson. | N                 | SEM               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences    | Department of Physics                       | 1     |                 | Pre-requisite: Mathematics or Physics or other science major  |

| PHY     | 312         | Mechanics and Electromagnetism              | Covers two major topics in physics, both dealing with forms of energy and momentum and how they are transmitted in space. Covers mechanics and dynamics, describing how bodies with mass move under various types of forces. Also covers electromagnetism, which describes how electric charges and magnets, and their motions, generate fields of force. Also describes how time-varying electric and magnetic fields are associated with electromagnetic waves, which include light.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences    | Department of Physics                       | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): with C or better: PHY 150; PHY 151; PHY 252 OR PHY 150; PHY 151; PHY 121; PHY 122 OR PHY 150; PHY 151; PHY 131; PHY 132   |

| PHY     | 371         | Driving Forces in Biology                   | What are the stable states of biomolecules? How do molecules interact? What forces drive molecules to bond and associate, to adsorb, to permeate through membranes, to undergo chemical reactions, to undergo conformational changes? Why are some changes gradual, as in the weakening of a ligand interaction with temperature, and others sudden (cooperative) such as protein folding or the insolubility of oil in water? Addresses these questions by statistical thermodynamics, a collection of principles and models that when combined with thermodynamics, aim to explain molecular forces and flows.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences    | Department of Physics                       | 3     |                 | Pre-requisite: PHY 252   |

| PHY     | 444         | Fundamentals of Nanoscience                 | For senior science majors and beginning graduate students teaching the cross-disciplinary subject of nanoscience. There is a strong emphasis on basics, so the course starts with a fairly rigorous introduction to quantum mechanics, statistical mechanics and chemical kinetics, though enough material is provided to allow nonphysics majors to come up to speed in these areas. This is followed by a survey of experimental techniques in nanoscience: microscopy, optical spectroscopy and scanning probe methods, and nanofabrication methods including "top down" and self assembly. Finally we survey applications: electrons in nanostructures, molecular electronics, nanomaterials and bio-nanoscience. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Integrative Sciences & Arts  | College of Integrative Sciences and Arts    | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): junior or senior standing; Credit is allowed for only PHY 444 or PHY 494 (Intro to Nanoscience)   |

| PHY     | 456         | Laser Optics                        | Theoretical and experimental aspects of applied optics including basic concepts of lasers, properties of optical beams, resonators and interferometry. Course consists of two parts: preparatory labs and applied projects. Preparatory labs provide theoretical and technical background for understanding of general features of electromagnetic wave propagation and technical features of optical lasers including high-power laser systems. Applied projects give students the opportunity to use laser optical systems to solve real-world problems.  | N                 | LEL               | N               | GNA           | Integrative Sciences & Arts | College of Integrative Sciences and Arts | 4     |                 | Prerequisite(s): PHY 361; Credit is allowed for only ABS 494 (Advanced Laser Laboratory), ABS 494 (Laser Optics) or PHY 456              |
| PHY     | 460         | Numerical Methods in Modern Physics | Advanced numerical methods with an emphasis on electromagnetism, quantum mechanics and materials science with computer labs on a multiprocessor cluster.  | N                 | LEL               | N               | GNA           | Integrative Sciences & Arts | College of Integrative Sciences and Arts | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): PHY 315   |

| PHY     | 465         | Advanced Laboratory II              | Continuation of PHY 334. Students may substitute a short laboratory research project for one of the elective experiments of the course, in consultation with a faculty sponsor and the course instructor.   | N                 | LAB               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences   | Department of Physics                    | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): PHY 334 with C or better  |
| PHY     | 472         | Advanced Biophysics Lab             | Offers selected experiments from contemporary biophysics. Emphasizes modern instrumentation, computer-assisted acquisition and analysis of data, and report writing. Emphasizes the importance of good notebook keeping.  | N                 | LEL               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences   | Department of Physics                    | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): PHY 371   |
| PHY     | 473         | From Molecules to Cells             | Offers selected subjects from biological physics covering the length scales from biomolecules to cells. Builds on knowledge acquired from thermodynamics and statistical mechanics to formulate basic principles behind the working of life systems. Free energy, entropic forces, chemical potentials and electrostatic interactions rule the "nanometer soup" of a living cell. Proton gradients across cell membranes are behind all the energy consumed by life. Random walks, dissipative dynamics, and hydrodynamic fluxes rule time-dependent phenomena. Covers systems including biomolecules, membranes, cells and nerves. | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences   | Department of Physics                    | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): PHY 371 with C or better; Pre-corequisite(s): PHY 472 with C or better if completed                                     |

| PHY     | 571         | Quantum Physics                      | Review modern physics, chemistry, math. Differential equation, operator, matrix formulations. Free particle, bound state problems. Examples from physics, chemistry and nanoscience.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | Department of Physics | 3     |                 | Credit is allowed for only MSE 571, NAN 571 or PHY 571  |
| PHY     | 576         | Quantum Theory                       | Operator methods in quantum mechanics, time-independent perturbation theory, variational methods, angular momentum and group representation theory, identical particles; quantum dynamics, including time-ordered operators, time-dependent perturbation theory, and Fermi's golden rule.                                | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | Department of Physics | 3     |                 |   |
| PHY     | 577         | Introduction to Quantum Field Theory | Explains necessity of generalizing quantum mechanics to a field theory viewpoint. Studies properties of scalar, spinor, and gauge fields; incorporates interactions; and learns to compute amplitudes, cross sections, and decay rates using formalism of Feynman diagrams.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | Department of Physics | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student  |
| PHY     | 580         | Practicum                            | Structured practical experience in a professional program, supervised by a practitioner and/or faculty member with whom the student works closely.   | Y                 | PRA               | Y               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | Department of Physics | 1-12  |                 |   |
| PHY     | 581         | Quantum Theory of Solids I           | Band structure models: pseudopotentials, density functional theory; optical and magnetic response; elementary excitations; transport theory, electron-photon interactions and superconductivity.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | Department of Physics | 3     |                 |   |
| PHY     | 582         | Quantum Theory of Solids II          | Continuation of PHY 581: broken symmetry; phase transitions; disorder, topological defects; nano-structures topics; soft condensed matter and current research.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | Department of Physics | 3     |                 |   |
| PHY     | 584         | Internship                           | Structured practical experience following a contract or plan, supervised by faculty and practitioners.   | Y                 | PRA               | Y               | Z1            | Liberal Arts and Sciences | Department of Physics | 1-12  |                 |   |
| PHY     | 590         | Reading and Conference               | Independent study in which a student meets regularly with a faculty member to discuss assignments. Course may include such assignments as intensive reading in a specialized area, writing a synthesis of literature on a specified topic, or writing a literature review of a topic.                                    | Y                 | LEC               | Y               | Z1            | Liberal Arts and Sciences | Department of Physics | 1-12  |                 |   |
| PHY     | 591         | Seminar                              | A small class emphasizing discussion, presentations by students, and written research papers.  | Y                 | SEM               | Y               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | Department of Physics | 1-12  |                 |   |
| PHY     | 592         | Research                             | Independent study in which a student, under the supervision of a faculty member, conducts research that is expected to lead to a specific project such as a thesis or dissertation, report, or publication. Assignments might include data collection, experimental work, data analysis, or preparation of a manuscript. | Y                 | RSC               | Y               | Z1            | Liberal Arts and Sciences | Department of Physics | 1-12  |                 |   |
| PHY     | 593         | Applied Project                      | Preparation of a supervised applied project that is a graduation requirement in some professional majors.  | Y                 | LEC               | Y               | Z1            | Liberal Arts and Sciences | Department of Physics | 1-12  |                 |   |
| PHY     | 594         | Conference and Workshop              | Topical instruction, usually in compressed format, leading to academic credit. Often offered off campus to groups of professionals.  | Y                 | LEC               | Y               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | Department of Physics | 1-12  |                 |   |

| POR     | 320         | Portuguese for Spanish Speakers I       | Intensive introduction to the Portuguese language for Spanish speakers. Designed for students with an active competence in Spanish who wish to learn the essential elements of the Portuguese grammar at an accelerated pace, as well as acquire listening, speaking, reading and writing skills. Based upon the theory of "intercomprehension," which implies the speaker's ability to understand the speech of another speaker who communicates in a dialect of the same language or a related language. Due to the linguistic similarities with Spanish, students master the four basic skills of listening, speaking, reading and writing of in Portuguese at a faster pace. | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of International Letters and Cultures | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): SPA 202 or 204 with C or better; Credit is allowed for only POR 320 or POR 394 (Portuguese Spanish Speakers I) |
| POR     | 321         | Portuguese for Spanish Speakers II      | Intensive intermediate-level Portuguese language class designed for Spanish-speakers. Further develops the students' communication skills in Portuguese. Makes use of the many common elements between Spanish and Portuguese (particularly vocabulary and grammar) to achieve an accelerated learning of linguistic, sociolinguistic and pragmatic competences required for fluency. The class is mostly conducted in Portuguese: do not be afraid of making mistakes while speaking Portuguese because this is a natural part of the learning process.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of International Letters and Cultures | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): POR 320 with C or better; Credit is allowed for only POR 321 or POR 394 (Portuguese Spanish Speakers II)       |

| POS     | 365         | Terrorism and Insurgency                     | Insurgency, civil war, revolution and terrorism are traditionally thought of as domestic events or "intrastate" conflicts between one violent domestic political group and the state. However, recent conflicts in Afghanistan, Libya and Syria, as well as the 9/11 attacks on the U.S. demonstrate that insurgencies often spill across borders and draw in actors far removed from the original conflict site. These conflicts also demonstrate that insurgencies and terror campaigns necessitate global policy responses. The international character of insurgency, therefore, requires students of political violence to consider a wide array of both international and domestic factors in order to better understand the origins, dynamics and resolution of modern insurgencies and terror campaigns. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences    | School of Politics and Global Studies    | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): minimum 45 hours; Credit is allowed for only POS 365 or POS 394 (Terrorism and Insurgency)  |

| POS     | 475         | Morality and Politics                           | Should morality play a role in politics? Machiavelli gives us one sort of answer, urging politicians to be dishonest, deceptive and even cruel. Kant disagrees, arguing instead that politicians should adhere to their personal morality over political calculations. Explores this question in two ways. First, looks more at the disagreement between great thinkers in the Western political tradition. Second, investigates contemporary political actors who bring moral concerns to the fore, including dirty politicians and extremist citizens (for example, radical animal rights activists, militant environmentalists or global poverty zealots). | POS     | 527         | Uncertainty and Decision Making | Knowledge is always incomplete, yet decisions must be made. Explores uncertainty and its relation to decision making, with a particular focus on the ways that science and science-derived information is applied with the intent of improving decisions. Explores the many meanings and origins of uncertainty, using theoretical and case-based approaches. A central theme is the relation among uncertainty, scientific prediction, and decision making, especially in politically charged issues, for example as related to management of the environment. Ultimately understands how effective decisions can be made in the face of inevitable uncertainties and contested knowledge. | N                 | SEM               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences    | School of Politics and Global Studies    | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate. | POS     | 540         | Ancient Political Theory               | Surveys the historical and philosophical developments in political thinking from the ancient Greeks up to the Renaissance. The world studied predominantly is one of profound political conflict and change. Moves from the Greek cities to the edge of modern political developments. The movement encompasses the political transformation from city-states to empires to the establishment of an overarching Christian world order that balances secular and sacred power, only to be challenged if not foundationally shaken by Machiavelli and realism.  | N                 | SEM               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Politics and Global Studies | 3     |                 | Pre-requisites: Graduate Political Science major   |
| POS     | 541         | Modern Political Theory                | Surveys the development of modern political thought from Machiavelli--through Hobbes, Locke, Hume, Rousseau, Burke, Kant, Montesquieu, Constant, Bentham, Mill, and Hegel--to Marx. Focuses on the primary writings of these thinkers as well as reading secondary literature. In addition to focusing on the distinctive contribution and relevance of individual thinkers, further explores certain recurring themes among which are the following: Are freedom and equality foes or friends? What allegiance do we owe the state and why? Do we have rights against the state? What is a just state? Is private property essential to individual liberty? Do laws enhance or threaten liberty? Is self-interest an adequate basis for political allegiance? Why should we pursue the common good, if at all? May be repeated with approval of the director of graduate studies.   | N                 | SEM               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Politics and Global Studies | 3     |                 |  |
| POS     | 550         | Comparative Politics                   | Surveys major approaches across topical areas such as revolutions, authoritarianism, policy processes, interest groups, and electoral politics. Focus varies with instructor.   | N                 | SEM               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Politics and Global Studies | 3     |                 |  |
| POS     | 552         | Women and Politics                     | Serve as an introduction to the comparative study of women and politics. Not a course on feminist theory; instead focuses on questions such as: Does the descriptive representation of women guarantee their substantive representation? Which electoral rules favor the election of women? Do the negative effects of gender quotas outweigh their impressive ability to increase the number of women in office? Have the news media helped or harmed female candidacies? Once in power do women govern differently than men? Focuses on the obstacles that women face in obtaining positions of power.  | N                 | SEM               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Politics and Global Studies | 3     |                 | Pre-requisite: Graduate student (degree seeking or nondegree seeking); Credit is allowed for only POS 552 or 598 (Women and Politics)        |

| POS     | 563         | Comparative Asian Security Policies    | Analyzes domestic and international constraints, belief systems, and economic components in security decisions by major powers and Asian nations.   | N                 | SEM               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Politics and Global Studies | 3     |                 |  |
| POS     | 570         | The Politics of Public Policy          | Examines the political dimensions of public policymaking. Emphasizes major theoretical explanations of the policy process--particularly elements such as agenda setting, implementation, and policy change--rather than on the substance of particular policies. Focuses primarily on U.S. domestic policy, with some comparative reference to other developed democracies.   | N                 | SEM               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Politics and Global Studies | 3     |                 | Pre-requisite: Graduate student (degree seeking or nondegree seeking); Credit is allowed for only POS 570 or 598 (Politics of Public Policy) |
| POS     | 571         | Science and Technology Policy          | Provides an in-depth introduction to theoretical perspectives on the role and place of science in democratic societies and democratic governance. Emphasizes how the ideas, ideologies, and practices of science are integrated into the design and implementation of government decision making, as well as how science both shapes and is shaped by the political organization and ordering of society. Pursues such questions in the context of U.S. politics, comparatively between the U.S. and Europe, and in emerging regimes of international governance.   | N                 | SEM               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Politics and Global Studies | 3     |                 | Pre-requisite: Graduate student (degree seeking or nondegree seeking); Credit is allowed for only HSD 501 or POS 571                         |
| POS     | 572         | Advanced Science and Technology Policy | Focuses on the role of knowledge and expertise in political and policy decision making. Particular emphasis is placed on the analysis of knowledge systems (formalized institutional approaches to the production, validation, and use of knowledge and expertise in policy decision making), their modes of failure, and the design of approaches that may be able to prevent, avoid, or reduce the frequency of such failures.  | N                 | SEM               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Politics and Global Studies | 3     |                 | Pre-requisite: HSD 501 or POS 571 with B or better. | POS     | 586         | International Political Economy        | International political economy (IPE) focuses on the relationship between the pursuit of wealth and power during the development and evolution of the global political economy. Assigned readings take an analytical approach to the subject, drawing on methods and theories developed in political science, economics, history and sociology. In addition to an overview of the methods and theories employed in the study of IPE, also examines a variety of current empirical research programs in the subfield. This seminar should enable students to read the academic literature, conduct independent research in the subfield, and understand contemporary problems in the global political economy.   | N                 | SEM               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Politics and Global Studies | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student   |

| PPE     | 230         | Teaching Group Exercise  | Introduces instructional strategies appropriate for the teaching of group exercise classes in secondary school settings.   | N                 | LEL               | N               | OPT           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 2     |                 | Credit is allowed for only PPE 230 or 294 (Teaching Group Exercise)  |
| PPE     | 235         | Teaching Strength and Conditioning for Health  | Fundamental principles, strategies and assessments of strength training and conditioning methodologies that are necessary to effectively operate in a school-based setting. Most secondary schools offer some form of strength training in a physical education setting, either as a stand-alone course or as part of a traditional class structure. Therefore, new physical education teachers should be well informed on the scientific rationale for the use of strength and conditioning programs in schools, and be able to design and implement these programs safely. Provides prospective physical education teachers with the knowledge and skills needed to safely and effectively operate in a school-based strength training setting, whether it is for physical education or sport performance. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 2     |                 | Credit is allowed for only PPE 235 or PPE 294 (Teaching Strength Conditioning for Health)  |
| PPE     | 240         | Physical Activity  | Recognizing individual interests and abilities, the program provides courses covering a wide variety of physical activities. We make an effort to address contemporary trends and student, faculty and staff interests. Offerings may include but are not limited to classes in the areas of: aquatics, artistic and social dance, fitness development, martial arts, mind/body, outdoor recreation, resistance training, sports and games.  | Y                 | PRA               | Y               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 1-2   |                 |  |

Discusses the history and trends of physical education as well as key concepts, programs, problems, and issues related to teaching physical education. Teaches essential background knowledge, better preparing for career success. The online (blackboard) component of this class provides practical experiential learning and assesses knowledge and comprehension of the key concepts presented in the course.   | N                 | LEL               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 3     |                 | Pre-requisite: Minimum 60 hours; Junior or senior standing; Credit is allowed for only PPE 300 or 394 (Intro to Physical Education, Fitness & Sport) |
| PPE     | 310         | Healthy Learning Communities   | Prepares educators with the knowledge, skills and dispositions to support learners' overall health. Focuses on educator's roles in creating healthy and active learning communities and addresses a variety of educational settings and learner ages.  | N                 | LEL               | N               | OPT           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): minimum 45 hours  |
| PPE     | 315         | Pediatric Movement Sciences for Physical Educators   | Provides a general overview of the functional anatomy of the human body as it relates to movement and the biomechanical principles underlying the execution of a given motor skill. Also examines the influence of physical growth and maturation on the development of motor skills.  | N                 | LEL               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 3     |                 | Pre-requisite: BIO 201; BIO 202; Credit is allowed for only PPE 315 or 394 (Apld Pediatric Functional Anat)  |
| PPE     | 320         | Exercise Physiology Concepts for Physical Educators  | Provides an introductory-level understanding of how the body responds prior to, during, and after participation in dynamic and static exercise. Examines the physiological basis of human movement, with emphasis on reviewing what exercise physiologists have learned about the diversity of physical activity, specifically in children. Although many physiological responses to activity are predictable, the magnitude and pattern of responses are unique depending on the age, gender, and previous experience of the individual. Also examines the role an active lifestyle plays in the overall health and well-being of school-aged children and adolescents.   | N                 | LEL               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 3     |                 | Pre-requisite: BIO 201; BIO 202; Credit is allowed for only PPE 320 or 394 (Pediatric Exercise Physical)   |
| PPE     | 335         | Movement and Physiology Principles of Children and Youth in Physical Activity Environments | Provides an introductory-level understanding of mechanical principles underlying human movement, the developmental patterns reflected in human movement birth through childhood and adolescence, basic principles of motor learning and the physiological basis of human movement. Covers how these principles directly affect the development of physical activity opportunities in in community-based sport and recreation settings with a specific eye toward the role an active lifestyle plays in the overall health and well-being of children and youth between the ages of 6 and 18.   | N                 | LEL               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): junior or senior standing   |
| PPE     | 340         | Understanding Children in Physical Activity Environments                                   | Teaches students an understanding of elementary-aged children and how to implement a curriculum in a physical activity environment. Students learn effective teaching techniques, how to effectively manage students, and ways to improve the physical skill and activity level of students. Prospective facilitators use authentic assessment techniques to assess and prescribe activities for improving motor skills in kindergarten through 6th grade youngsters. Prospective facilitators leave with requisite knowledge to implement a comprehensive physical activity program and the physical skills necessary for successful instruction.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): minimum junior standing   |
| PPE     | 345         | Adolescents in Physical Activity Environments: Understanding and Practices                 | Gives an understanding of the changing scope of physical education in an era of education reform. Students learn about and teach a variety of curricular models and styles. Uses technology and assessments in authentic settings. Focuses on increasing the physical activity levels of secondary students during physical education and also promotes physical activity outside of the school setting. Covers strategies for advocating the importance of quality physical education to school and district personnel during a time when local administrators are pressured to allocate more time to core subject areas.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): junior or senior standing   |

| PSY     | 432         | Embodied Cognition                         | Do left-handers think differently from right-handers? Do paraplegics perceive the world differently from those who can walk? If you say about a potential date, "He leaves me cold," do you literally feel cold? And does a Botox treatment to alleviate frown lines makes it difficult to understand sentences about sadness? The surprising answer to all of these questions is YES! Embodied cognition proposes that thinking is based on neural and bodily systems of perception, action and emotion. Explores this claim through readings, discussions, debates and embodied interactions, and considers implications of embodied cognition across areas of psychology and applications in education. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences    | Department of Psychology                 | 3     | L               | Prerequisite(s): PSY 290 with C or better; Credit is allowed for only PSY 432 or PSY 498 (Embodied Cognition) or PSY 529 |

| PSY     | 529         | Embodied Cognition                            | Do left-handers think differently from right-handers? Do paraplegics perceive the world differently from those who can walk? If you say about a potential date, "He leaves me cold," do you literally feel cold? And does a Botox treatment to alleviate frown lines make it difficult to understand sentences about sadness? The surprising answer to all of these questions is YES! Embodied cognition proposes that thinking is based on neural and bodily systems of perception, action and emotion. Explores this claim through readings, discussions, debates and embodied interactions, and considers implications of embodied cognition across areas of psychology and applications in education.   | N                 | SEM               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences    | Department of Psychology                 | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): graduate standing in Psychology; Credit is allowed for only PSY 432 or PSY 529 or PSY 591 (Embodied Cognition)          |

| PSY     | 536         | Statistical Methods in Prevention Research    | Statistical methods used in prevention research including epidemiological methods, logistic regression, program effect estimation, estimation, and mediation analysis.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences    | Department of Psychology                 | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student   |
| PSY     | 537         | Longitudinal Growth Modeling                  | Growth modeling methodology to describe individual variation in development over time. Employs multilevel and structural equation modeling frameworks.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences    | Department of Psychology                 | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student   |
| PSY     | 538         | Advanced Structural Equation Modeling         | Mean and covariance structure analysis. Includes multiple-group modeling, two-level hierarchical modeling, longitudinal growth modeling, analysis with categorical outcomes.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences    | Department of Psychology                 | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student   |
| PSY     | 539         | Multilevel Models for Psychological Research  | Multilevel (i.e., hierarchical linear) modeling, as described by Raudenbush and Bryk (2002) and others. Covers analytic strategies for analyzing a variety of different nested data structures (e.g., couples data, clients nested within group therapy settings, children nested within classrooms, longitudinal data). Covers two- and three-level models for cross-sectional and longitudinal data and also addresses related topics such as centering and estimation. Students perform and interpret the results of these models using a variety of statistical software packages.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences    | Department of Psychology                 | 3     |                 | Pre-requisite: PSY 531; Credit is allowed for only PSY 539 or 591 (Multilevel Modeling)  |
| PSY     | 540         | Missing Data Analysis                         | Covers analytic strategies for analyzing data with missing values, with a special emphasis on modern approaches for dealing with missing data, in particular maximum likelihood missing data handling and multiple imputation, maximum likelihood estimation and multiple imputation. Familiarizes students with missing data theory, traditional analysis methods (e.g., deleting incomplete cases, single imputation methods), maximum likelihood estimation, multiple imputation, planned missing data research designs, and the inclusion of auxiliary variables. Students learn how to perform and interpret the results of these models using a variety of statistical software packages.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences    | Department of Psychology                 | 3     |                 | Pre-requisite: PSY 532; Credit is allowed for only PSY 540 or 591 (Missing Data)   |
| PSY     | 541         | Research in Cognitive Development             | Theoretical and empirical issues in the study of children's knowledge and cognitive processes. Comparison of research in Piagetian and other traditions.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences    | Department of Psychology                 | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student   |
| PSY     | 542         | Social Development                            | Reviews and critiques major issues in the area of social development. | PSY     | 543         | Statistical Mediation Analysis                | Specifically covers the substantive motivations for mediating variables and third-variable effects (interaction, confounder, covariate and mediator) in general. Mediation represents a chain such that one variable causes a mediating variable and the mediating variable causes a dependent variable. Describes the single mediator model in detail including assumptions, estimators and geometric interpretations. Once the details of the single mediator model are understood, analysis is extended to multiple mediator models, path analysis, and models with moderators and mediators. Discusses modern causal inference approaches for mediation along with latent variable models, multilevel models and special models for longitudinal data. Also describes research designs for investigating mediating variables. Students learn how to perform and interpret the results of analysis using a variety of statistical software packages. | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences    | Department of Psychology                 | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): PSY 530; PSY 531; Credit is allowed for only PSY 543 or PSY 591 (Mediation) or PSY 591 (Statistical Mediation Analysis) |
| PSY     | 545         | Advanced Legal Psychology                     | Surveys psychological theory and research as applied to the cognitions, feelings and behavior of individuals in the legal system. Explores the implications of several subfields of psychology (e.g., social, cognitive, clinical) for legal settings, such as police departments, courtrooms, jury rooms. Provides foundation for those who are considering a career in forensic psychology, law, social work, criminal justice and should also be interesting to those who want to know more about the social and psychological issues at play in the legal system.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | New Interdis Arts & Sciences | School of Social and Behavioral Sciences | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student   |
| PSY     | 546         | Advanced Forensic Psychology                  | Advanced overview of the clinical practice of forensic psychology: the assessment and treatment of people who interact with the legal system. Focuses on the ways in which psychologists do clinical work (assessment and treatment) to help courts make informed decisions about cases.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | New Interdis Arts & Sciences | School of Social and Behavioral Sciences | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student   |

| PSY     | 554         | Item Response Theory                                     | A collection of measurement models based on item response theory (IRT). The models express the probabilities of responses to test or questionnaire items as a function of latent respondent characteristics and item properties. IRT models form the basis for measurement in standardized educational testing, but generally are also now used in clinical, social and personality measurement in psychology, medicine and the social sciences. Assumptions underlying IRT models, methods of parameter estimation and fit evaluation. Also covers important applications of the models in computerized adaptive testing, the detection of measurement bias and multidimensional IRT. Uses several software tools useful in IRT modeling.                   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences    | Department of Psychology                      | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): PSY 534; Credit is allowed for only PSY 554 or 591 (Item Response Theory)  |

| PSY     | 568         | Stress and the Brain                                     | Covers the fundamentals of stress and brain interactions. Presents a foundation from a historical perspective, then the basics of an organism's stress response, including the activation of the sympathetic nervous system and the hypothalamic-pituitary-adrenal axis. The stress response is highly conserved and allows organisms to respond and adapt to their environment. A highly effective and robust stress response facilitates adaptation and behavioral flexibility. However, a maladaptive stress response can produce detrimental outcomes. The ultimate goal is to understand the dynamic and reciprocal processes by which the stress response and brain interact to produce behavioral flexibility and resilience or detrimental outcomes. | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences    | Department of Psychology                      | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s) degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student; Credit is allowed for either BIO 568 or PSY 568                                |

| PTX     | 432         | Fundamentals of Pharmacology                   | Aspects of pharmacology using an integrated approach to familiarize students with natural and synthetic therapeutic agents used in medicine.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | New Interdis Arts & Sciences | School of Mathematical and Natural Sciences        | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): BIO 340 or LSC 347; BIO 353; CHM 231 or 234; Credit is allowed for only LSC 432 or PTX 432   |
| PTX     | 450         | Pharmacology and Toxicology Laboratory         | Provides experimental and laboratory experience in conducting toxicology tests to determine the ED50 and LD50 for chemicals. Covers the pragmatic considerations of experimental design, implementation and data analysis. Experiments include whole organism tests as well as cell assays and numerical modeling experiments.  | N                 | LAB               | N               | GNA           | New Interdis Arts & Sciences | School of Mathematical and Natural Sciences        | 1     |                 | Pre- or corequisite(s): FOR 475 or LSC 432 or LSC 475 or PTX 432 or PTX 475   |
| PTX     | 475         | Principles of Toxicology                       | Presents the fundamental principles of toxicology and its application to both human and environmental situations. Starts with the means of defining and quantifying toxic effects through dose response curves (e.g. LD50, EC50, LOEL, NOEL). Then focuses on absorption pathways for toxicants as well as the degradation metabolism pathways for toxicants. Finally focuses on the mechanism of toxic action for common poisons and environmental pollutants. Emphasizes toxicants that students are likely to encounter in forensics and environmental fields.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | New Interdis Arts & Sciences | School of Mathematical and Natural Sciences        | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): BCH 361 or BCH 371 or LSC 394 (Modern Concepts in Biochemistry) with C or better; BIO 353 with C or better; Credit is allowed for only FOR 475 or LSC 475 or PTX 475           |

| PUP     | 481         | Optimization Fundamentals for Spatial Analysis | Covers the fundamentals of optimization for spatial analysis. Reviews elements of calculus, matrices, and basic linear algebra. Introduces linear programming, integer programming and branch and bound, and heuristics. Provides the basics for use and application of GIScience and spatial analysis methods. Objectives include: reviewing basics of math, calculus and linear algebra; introducing optimization approaches, including linear programming, integer programming and heuristics; and applying these methods to structured problems.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Geographical Sciences and Urban Planning | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): MAT 270, 271 or 272 with C or better; Credit is allowed for only GIS 461, 561, PUP 481, 581, GCU 494 (Optimization Fundamentals) or GCU 598 (Optimization Fundamentals) |
| PUP     | 482         | Location Analysis and Modeling                 | Provides a technical overview of location theory in the context of GIScience, focusing on analysis and modeling issues. Relies upon applications associated with emergency service planning, natural resource management, retail site selection, among others, to make connections among models, spatial information, and interpretation of findings. Explores utilization and implementation considerations using GIS. Objectives include: exposing a range of location analysis and modeling approaches; applying approaches in combination with GIS and optimization software; and carrying out an application-oriented study relying on acquired skills. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Geographical Sciences and Urban Planning | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): GIS 211 with C or better; GIS 461 with C or better; Credit is allowed for only GIS 462 or GIS 562 or PUP 482 or PUP 582 or PUP 598 (Location Modeling)                  |

| PUP     | 553         | Urban Infrastructure Anatomy and Sustainable Development | Understanding how built environment infrastructure systems interact with ecosystem services is critical for policies and decisions directing urban sustainability. Brings together students from several disciplines to develop a semester-long research project focused on a particular urban sustainability problem in Phoenix. During the semester, students are given background on how infrastructure systems work and are interdependent, and explore tools and methods for urban sustainability assessment with peers from several disciplines. As a class, students evaluate a particular urban sustainability problem for Phoenix, interact with local policy and decision makers in developing solutions, and present their findings at the end of the semester to the ASU community. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Geographical Sciences and Urban Planning | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree-or nondegree-seeking graduate. | PUP     | 579         | Qualitative Research                                     | Covers key qualitative skills and techniques that planners require, including research design and the understanding of validity and reliability issues, case study research approaches, qualitative data collection strategies, and strategies for analysis.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Geographical Sciences and Urban Planning | 2     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student; PUP 570 with C or better; PUP 571 with C or better  |
| PUP     | 580         | Practicum  | Structured practical experience in a professional program, supervised by a practitioner and/or faculty member with whom the student works closely.  | Y                 | PRA               | Y               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Geographical Sciences and Urban Planning | 1-12  |                 |   |
| PUP     | 581         | Optimization Fundamentals for Spatial Analysis           | Covers the fundamentals of optimization for spatial analysis. Reviews elements of calculus, matrices and basic linear algebra. Introduces linear programming, integer programming and branch and bound, and heuristics. Provides the basics for use and application of GIScience and spatial analysis methods. Objectives include: (1) review basics of math, calculus and linear algebra; (2) introduce optimization approaches, including linear programming, integer programming and heuristics; and (3) apply these methods to structured problems.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Geographical Sciences and Urban Planning | 3     |                 | Pre-requisites: Graduate student (degree seeking or nondegree seeking); Credit is allowed for only GIS 461, 561, PUP 481, 581, GCU 494 (Optimization Fundamentals) or 598 (Optimization Fundamentals)   |
| PUP     | 582         | Location Analysis and Modeling                           | Provides a technical overview of location theory in the context of GIScience, focusing on analysis and modeling issues. Relies upon applications associated with emergency service planning, natural resource management, retail site selection, among others to make connections among models, spatial information and interpretation of findings. Explores utilization and implementation considerations using GIS. Objectives include: (1) exposure to a range of location analysis and modeling approaches; (2) ability to apply approaches in combination with GIS and optimization software; and (3) capability of carrying out an application-oriented study relying on acquired skills.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Geographical Sciences and Urban Planning | 3     |                 | Pre-requisites: GPH 581; Credit is allowed for only GPH 482, 582, PUP 482, 582, or 598 (Location Modeling)  |
| PUP     | 583         | Fieldwork  | Structured, supervised field experience in a field science or other discipline requiring experience in field techniques.  | Y                 | PRA               | Y               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Geographical Sciences and Urban Planning | 1-12  |                 |   |

| PUP     | 592         | Research   | Independent study in which a student, under the supervision of a faculty member, conducts research that is expected to lead to a specific project such as a thesis or dissertation, report, or publication. Assignments might include data collection, experimental work, data analysis, or preparation of a manuscript.  | Y                 | RSC               | Y               | Z1            | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Geographical Sciences and Urban Planning | 1-12  |                 | Pre-requisites: Urban and Environmental Planning graduate student   |
| PUP     | 593         | Applied Project  | Preparation of a supervised applied project that is a graduation requirement in some professional majors.   | Y                 | PRA               | Y               | Z1            | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Geographical Sciences and Urban Planning | 1-12  |                 | Pre-requisites: Urban and Environmental Planning graduate student   |
| PUP     | 594         | Conference and Workshop                                  | Topical instruction, usually in compressed format, leading to academic credit. Often offered off campus to groups of professionals.   | Y                 | PRA               | Y               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Geographical Sciences and Urban Planning | 1-12  |                 |   |
| PUP     | 595         | Continuing Registration                                  | Used in situations where registration is necessary but where credit is not needed. Replaces arbitrary enrollment in reading and conference, research, thesis, dissertation, etc. Used by students when taking comprehensive examinations, defending theses or dissertations, or fulfilling the continuous enrollment requirement in doctoral programs. Credit is not awarded, and no grade is assigned.   | Y                 | IND               | Y               | Z3            | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Geographical Sciences and Urban Planning | 1     |                 | Pre-requisites: Urban and Environmental Planning graduate student   |

| REL     | 300         | The Future of Religions                              | Critical theorists of modern religious and secular beliefs argued that both theism and atheism have had their martyrs and tyrants. Nietzsche proclaimed "God" of the West dead, Marx unmasked religion as opium for the oppressed masses, and Freud analyzed religious future as an unconscious illusion. The future of secular progress has become equally suspect in the wake of the Holocaust, Hiroshima, the gulags, the killing fields of Cambodia, Rwanda. Globally motivated terror revealed itself as capable of religious as much secular justifications. The future of faith and reason has become a doubly open theoretical and practical question in philosophy, religious studies, literary study, critical theory, cultural and gender studies, and all sciences. Applies theoretical and methodological tools to critically exam beliefs, practices, and communities and their role in both generating and transforming the ethical and spiritual discontents of the global age. | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | New Interdis Arts & Sciences | School of Humanities, Arts, and Cultural Studies   | 3     | L or HU         | Prerequisite(s): ENG 102, 105, or 108 with C or better; Credit is allowed for only HON 394 (The Future of Religions) or PHI 303 or REL 300                         |

| REL     | 585         | Philosophical and Spiritual Issues in Death and Dying | From Plato to Maimonides to Heidegger to Kubler-Ross, scholars, clinicians, and spiritual writers have recognized that attitudes about death and dying contribute to understandings of human existence. Recalling the ancient Socratic, biblical, and other spiritual traditions of the cura animarum (care for and cure of the soul) and joining contemporary post/secular conversations relevant to integration of body-mind-spirit, this course introduces basic concepts and practices of care ethics and spirituality. Focuses on relations among existential (ontological), therapeutic (psychosomatic), and spiritual (religious) dimensions of care. Theoretically, the course is inter-faith in approach, holistic in scope, and specialized in content. Practically, students examine real-life issues in care ethics and spirituality from multiple perspectives. | N                 | SEM               | Y               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences    | Historical, Philosophical & Religious Studies, Sch | 3-9   |                 | Pre-requisites: Graduate student (degree seeking or nondegree seeking); Credit is allowed for only MAS, PHI 550 or REL 585 |

| RUS     | 439         | Art in Exile: Vladimir Vladimirovich Nabokov | In English. The scandalous success of Lolita (1955) allowed Vladimir Nabokov to retire from teaching at Cornell University and move to Switzerland to devote himself to fiction, translation, criticism and lepidoptery. This was only one of the many metamorphoses that Nabokov, a Russian noble, underwent while in exile, moving from Russia to the Crimea, Cambridge UK, Berlin, Paris, Cambridge MA, Ithaca, Hollywood and finally Montreux. Examines the Russian roots of Nabokov's Russian (in translation) and American novels about exile: his first novel, Mary (1926), The Defense (1929), Glory (1932), and his tribute to 19th-century Russian literature, The Gift (1938), which he considered his greatest Russian novel. These are followed by Lolita (1955), Pnin (1957) and Pale Fire (1962), his memoirs, Speak, Memory (1966), and some essays and short stories. Films include Lolita by Stanley Kubrick (1962) and Adrian Lyne (1997).   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of International Letters and Cultures | 3     | HU & L            | Prerequisite(s): ENG 102 or 105 or 108 with C or better; Credit is allowed for only RUS 439 or SLC 439 or ENG/RUS/SLC 494 (Art in Exile: Vladimir Vladimirovich Nabokov) |

| SBS     | 335         | Power and American Democracy                   | Explores how persistent patterns of marginalization and privilege impede the realization of democratic ideals in U.S. society. In particular, unpacks how, in practice, different forms of political power reinforce or challenge persistent patterns of marginalization and privilege. In combination with the study of power as the repression and control of others' actions, the course also explores power as exercised in the collective production of social boundaries. Students learn how to better analyze, critique and engage with different forms of power operating in U.S. society.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | New Interdis Arts & Sciences | School of Social and Behavioral Sciences | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): minimum junior standing; Credit is allowed for only POS 335 or SBS 335 or POS 394 (Power and American Democracy) or SBS 394 (Power and American Democracy) |

| SBS     | 460         | Global Cities   | This close look at megacities in the global south decisively challenges the outdated impression that the rest of the world's cities still lag way behind the U.S. and Europe. The social sciences' debate over "global cities" anchors our examination of the reorganization of metropolitan social space under impact of neoliberal globalization since the 1970s. Explores urban inequalities of slums and dreamworlds; compares vernacular and transnational styles of urbanism (in architecture, design, markets, consumerism, jobs, ads, ways of living); and asks how transnational flows of people, capital and culture have reconfigured ethnic relations and national identities rooted in global cities. Students become virtual transnational flâneurs, tacking between the slums and skyscrapers of global cities, and conduct guided research on a global megacity to investigate how the production of the global city changes the lived space and urban culture of local residents, and how they respond. We ask, whose city is it? | N                 | LEL               | N               | OPT           | New Interdis Arts & Sciences  | School of Social and Behavioral Sciences | 3     | SB & G          | Prerequisite(s): minimum junior standing; Credit is allowed for only ASB 442 or SBS 460  |

| SCM     | 432         | Planning and Control Systems for Supply Chain Management | At the core of all supply chain management processes and essential to the determination and direction of the flow of resources needed to produce goods and services. Uses Microsoft Excel for supporting analysis. Includes processes and methods to forecast, manage inventory, plan needed capacity, determine resources needed for production, determine priority and sequencing of activities, perform master scheduling and material requirements planning.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | W.P. | SCM     | 440         | Quality Management/Measurement                           | Provides a broad introduction to quality management frameworks and tools, with an emphasis on supply chain and operations management issues. Introduces modern quality management approaches including Total Quality Management, Lean and Six Sigma. Students learn how to define quality for a product or service, develop appropriate measurement systems, and apply statistical and systems thinking to control and improve the underlying processes. Covers quality awards and performance excellence programs and quality management systems such as the ISO 9000 family of standards.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | W.P. | SCM     | 455         | Research and Negotiation                                 | Supply management ensures an organization has resources (i.e., materials, services, equipment) to deliver on promises to stakeholders. This happens by strategically designing supply systems for categories of spend and creating favorable supply agreements. A real-world class project and a real-time contract negotiation simulation helps students understand (1) the relationship among organizational, supply management and purchase category objectives; (2) frameworks and tools to analyze the supply conditions of a category, specifically spend analysis, market/demand analysis and price/cost analysis; (3) how to develop category strategies to ensure adequate and highest value resource supply into the future; (4) the translation of category strategies into manageable supply contracts; and (5) the requisite skills and processes for planning and executing successful contract negotiations. | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | W.P. | SCM     | 463         | Global Supply Chain Management                           | With increased globalization and offshore sourcing, global supply chain management is becoming an important issue for many businesses. Like traditional supply chain management, the underlying factors behind the trend are reducing the costs of procurement and decreasing the risks related to purchasing activities. The big difference is that global supply chain management involves a company's worldwide interests and suppliers rather than simply a local or national orientation. Enables students to appreciate the challenges of operating supply chains across international boundaries including how to manage various salient issues including sociocultural, economic, technological and political factors that may shape decisions relating to sourcing and moving goods and services across different geographical boundaries.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | W.P. | SCM     | 479         | Supply Chain Strategy                                    | Discusses the management of supply chains at the strategic level and from a systems point of view. Views key supply chain functions, drivers and metrics within an integrated system. Topics include network design, innovation, sustainability, coordination and management of the critical areas of the supply chain. Class methodology focuses on an open-forum discussion of supply chain strategy and a detailed analysis of case studies. Student teams investigate and report on current news and trends in supply chain   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | W.P. | SCN     | 205         | Introduction to Tropical Ecology: A Cultural Exchange | To better understand the astonishing diversity of tropical ecosystems, students work together to investigate the ecology and cultures of Neotropical ecosystems: how they were formed and how they are changing.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 3     |                 | Credit is allowed for only SCN 205 or SCN 305 or SCN 505 or SCN 294 (Costa Rican Language, Culture, Society) or SCN 294 (Tropical Ecosystems of Costa Rica)  |
| SCN     | 209         | Introduction to Environmental Education Project       | Covers topics in environmental education that assist students with being able to learn about and investigate their environment in order to make intelligent and informed decisions.   | Y                 | LEC               | Y               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 1     |                 |  |
| SCN     | 250         | Physical Science by Inquiry                           | Laboratory-based development of concepts and reasoning skills in the physical sciences. Emphasizes open-ended investigations, dialogues between the instructor and individual students, and small group discussions. Helps students think of physical science as an active process of discovery in which they can participate. Helps preservice teachers understand inquiry and develop inquiry skills. Liberal arts students gain experience in the scientific process. Useful for students who wish to improve their science preparation before taking further science courses. Forms foundation for scientific literacy.   | N                 | LAB               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 4     | SQ              | Credit is allowed for only SCN 250 or 294 (Physical Science by Inquiry)  |
| SCN     | 294         | Special Topics  | Covers topics of immediate or special interest to a faculty member and students.  | Y                 | LEC               | Y               | OPT           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 1-4   |                 |  |
| SCN     | 300         | Foundations of Environmental Education                | Introduces environmental education, including the philosophy, historical development, resource identification, curriculum development, field trips and other activities designed to provide the structure and development of the field of environmental education. Explores the antecedents to the present-day field and connects the field of environmental education to curricular programs that are an outgrowth of perceived and actual need in the field of environmental education.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 3     |                 |  |
| SCN     | 301         | Ecology and Natural History of the Sonoran Desert     | Overview of the plants, animals, and geology of the desert ecosystem based on the Arizona K-12 Science Standards. Provides students with basic knowledge of the Sonoran Desert characteristics and its relationship to the total school curriculum.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 3     |                 |  |
| SCN     | 302         | Outdoor Education                                     | Develops a meaningful framework for those who wish to enhance their skills in teaching about outdoor education and personal knowledge of the desert. Whether it be for personal challenge, leadership training or professional certification, outdoor education offers all participants the experience, inspiration and encouragement to live more sustainable lifestyles. The best thing you can do for the natural environment is to discover it then show it to others.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 3     | L               |  |
| SCN     | 303         | Environmental Education Internship                    | Provides opportunities to learn more about natural sciences and local history; outdoor education and field trip course facilitation and training; individual and group development; facility care and maintenance including landscaping, gardening and carpentry; and the restoration and maintenance of the grounds and teaching materials. Supports and/or develops education projects and programs as outlined by the locations' Educational Outreach office. Various other tasks include: field trip coordination, development of curriculum and classroom materials, hands-on fieldwork, school outreach, off-site outreach events support, and Outdoor Education event support.   | N                 | PRA               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 1-2   |                 | Prerequisite(s): minimum 45 hours  |
| SCN     | 304         | Sonoran Desert Flora                                  | Plants and plant communities support much of the diversity of life in the Sonoran Desert and the surrounding regions. Covers the fundamentals of ecology from the perspective of plants including population, community and ecosystem ecology. Also includes identification and classification of plants and plant communities in the Sonoran Desert region. Incorporates practical field exercises designed to acquaint the student with plant community analysis, classification and description.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): minimum 45 hours  |
| SCN     | 305         | Tropical Ecology: A Cultural Exchange                 | To better understand the astonishing diversity of tropical ecosystems. Investigates the ecology and cultures of Neotropical ecosystems: how they were formed and how they are changing. Introduces language, culture and society of people and communities in tropical countries of Central and South America. Also examines cultural perspectives and beliefs. Focuses on four areas: (1) background on history and present day society of Central or South America, introductory conversational Spanish for interacting with Central and South Americans; (2) living in Central and South America, community, family and education: visiting families and private and public schools; (3) debriefing and reflecting on Central and South America language and culture and (4) the location of Central and South America countries, the rain forests' impact on the world, climate, cultures and contributions to science. | Y                 | LEC               | Y               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): minimum 45 hours; Credit is allowed for only SCN 305 or SCN 494 (Tropical Ecosystems of Costa Rica)   |
| SCN     | 307         | Learning from Nature: Biomimicry and STEM             | Introduces biomimicry, an emerging discipline that seeks to learn from nature to solve human problems. "Biomimicry" (from bios, meaning life, and mimesis, meaning to imitate) is a new discipline that studies nature's best ideas and then imitates these designs and processes to solve human problems. With an emphasis on getting outside and exploring the land around, focuses on observing, appreciating and learning from nature and natural systems in our local environment.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): minimum 45 hours; Credit is allowed for only SCN 307 or SCN 494 (Learning from Nature: Biomimicry & STEM)                                   |
| SCN     | 308         | Urban Environmental Education                         | Environmental education and educators translate the complex web of earth systems science, sustainability, environmental issues and environmental change for the public. Provides opportunity to understand and experience the interface between humans and the planet to facilitate ecological literacy and ecologically responsible behavior. Assists students in becoming more sensitive to and aware of earth systems and environmental change. Also provides the knowledge, skills and motivation for understanding sustainable living in the urban environment.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): minimum 45 hours  |
| SCN     | 400         | Sustainability Science for Teachers                   | Explores the challenges of sustaining human health and well-being on Earth due to human exploitation of natural resources. Seeks sustainable solutions through science, technology and society acting at global and local levels. Covers diverse approaches used by scientists, scholars and practitioners to study and assess human-environment interactions pertaining to sustainability challenges and solutions. Focuses on how to teach sustainability concepts in the K-8 classroom.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): admission to the Professional Program; Credit is allowed for only SCN 400 or SCN 401 or SCN 494 (Sustainability for the Elementary Teacher) |

| SCN     | 507         | Learning from Nature: Biomimicry and STEM         | Offers an introduction to biomimicry, an emerging discipline that seeks to learn from nature to solve human problem. "Biomimicry" (from bios, meaning life, and mimesis, meaning to imitate) is a new discipline that studies nature's best ideas and then imitates these designs and processes to solve human problems. With an emphasis on getting outside and exploring the land, focuses on observing, appreciating and learning from nature and natural systems in our local environment.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student  |
| SCN     | 508         | Urban Environmental Education                     | Environmental education and educators translate the complex web of earth systems science, sustainability, environmental issues and environmental change for the public. Gives students an opportunity to understand and experience the interface between humans and the planet to facilitate ecological literacy and ecologically responsible behavior. Assists in becoming more sensitive to and aware of earth systems and environmental change and also provides the knowledge, skills and motivation for understanding sustainable living in the urban environment. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student  |

| SER     | 502         | Emerging Languages and Programming Paradigms         | Emerging programming languages, their design, description, implementation, and advanced features; API design, including facilities for creating secure distributed applications, facilities supporting software services, naming and composition; language paradigms and the resulting implications on execution; run-time systems and storage management; approaches to compilation and execution. Requires ability to program in an object-oriented programming language and knowledge of data structures, algorithms, and analysis. | N                 | LEL               | N               | GNA           | Ira A. Fulton Engineering | Software Engineering | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): Fulton Engineering graduate student   |
| SER     | 515         | Software Enterprise: Inception and Elaboration       | Project-centric course focusing on the relationship of software processes to entrepreneurship and business processes; requirements specification and requirements analysis; study of the context and evolution of the software enterprise. The first of a two-semester sequence.   | N                 | LEL               | N               | GNA           | Ira A. Fulton Engineering | Software Engineering | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): Master of Computing Studies or Software Engineering MS student  |
| SER     | 516         | Software Enterprise: Project and Process Management  | Project-centric course focusing on software process, project management, and technical leadership. Study of the context and evolution of software enterprise project management.   | N                 | LEL               | N               | GNA           | Ira A. | SER     | 518         | Software Factory II                                  | Second in a two-semester capstone culminating experience for graduate students. Student teams work through concurrent product and service offering lifecycles in a project context. Covers concepts including opportunity assessment, risk management, technology evaluation, licensing models, resource planning, delivery models such as hosted, turnkey, and Software as a Service (SaaS), technology acquisition, outsourcing, governance, quality assurance, software certification, and continuous process improvement.          | N                 | LEL               | N               | GNA           | Ira A. Fulton Engineering | Software Engineering | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): SER 517   |
| SER     | 531         | Semantic Web Engineering                             | State-of-the-art semantics-based approaches and tools that can be leveraged to enrich and enhance today's big data. Covers approaches to ontology engineering, searching and filtering relevant information, representing big data, modern applications of these methods and techniques for Web-based intelligent applications and services. Discusses applications of semantic technology that could improve the processing of big data.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Ira A. Fulton Engineering | Software Engineering | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): Fulton Engineering graduate student; Credit is allowed for only SER 594 (Semantic Web) or CST 594 (Semantic Web) or SER 531 |
| SER     | 533         | Database-Centric Enterprise Applications Development | Solutions for enterprise software systems based on relational database technology. Persistence solutions in middleware frameworks. O/R, XML, and scalability issues.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Ira A. Fulton Engineering | Software Engineering | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): Graduate student (degree seeking or nondegree seeking); Minimum University Cum GPA 3.0; CST 433                             |
| SER     | 540         | Internet-Enabled Embedded Devices                    | Accessing hardware devices through Internet, including Applets, HTTP, custom byte streams, XML-RPC, SOAP. Building network-based applications that interface hardware.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Ira A. | SER     | 590         | Reading and Conference                               | Independent study in which a student meets regularly with a faculty member to discuss assignments. Course may include such assignments as intensive reading in a specialized area, writing a synthesis of literature on a specified topic, or writing a literature review of a topic.  | Y                 | REC               | Y               | Z1            | Ira A. Fulton Engineering | Software Engineering | 1-12  |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student   |
| SER     | 591         | Seminar  | A small class emphasizing discussion, presentations by students, and written research papers.  | Y                 | LEC               | Y               | OPT           | Ira A. Fulton Engineering | Software Engineering | 1-12  |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student   |
| SER     | 592         | Research   | Independent study in which a student, under the supervision of a faculty member, conducts research that is expected to lead to a specific project such as a thesis or dissertation, report, or publication. Assignments might include data collection, experimental work, data analysis, or preparation of a manuscript.   | Y                 | LEC               | Y               | Z1            | Ira A. Fulton Engineering | Software Engineering | 1-12  |                 | Pre-requisite: Graduate student (degree seeking or nondegree seeking)  |
| SER     | 593         | Applied Project                                      | Preparation of a supervised applied project that is a graduation requirement in some professional majors.  | Y                 | LEC               | Y               | Z1            | Ira A. | SES     | 106         | Habitable Worlds                                | Are we alone in the Universe? If so, why? If not, where are our cosmic cousins? Such questions, once the domain of science fiction, are on the verge of being answered with science facts. Astronomers are discovering planets around other stars. Planetary scientists are exploring the worlds in our solar system. Biologists are unlocking the secrets of metabolism and evolution. Geoscientists are determining how the Earth supports life. And as we struggle to build a sustainable future for ourselves, all of us are finding out how technologically advanced civilizations rise and how they might fall. This course surveys these topics. In the process, students master basic concepts from across the major areas of science and learn what makes the Earth a habitable world.           | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Earth and Space Exploration | 4     | SQ              |   |

| SES     | 141         | Energy In Everyday Life                         | Energy is a concept that threads throughout science and engineering and is at the heart of understanding how the world around us works. What is energy? How is energy used in biological, chemical, electrical, mechanical, nuclear systems that impacts our daily lives? What would our world be like if there was a nearly infinite supply of inexpensive energy? Serves the needs of undergraduate students and future K-8 teachers of mastering basic concepts of energy generation, delivery, conversion, efficiency and what makes energy universal. This transdisciplinary online survey course helps students understand concepts and develop skills that crosscut scientific disciplines, such as the ability to observe, think critically and gather data to make order-of-magnitude estimates. | N                 | LEL               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Earth and Space Exploration | 4     |                 | Credit is allowed for only SES 141 or SES 194 (Energy in Everyday Life)   |

| SES     | 350         | Engineering Systems and Experimental Problem Solving             | Introduces integration of scientific and engineering computational methods into scientific research and successful exploration. Provides an active, project-based environment for learning science and engineering by means of a common set of computational tools. Also provides a detailed overview of procedural and object-oriented programming with an emphasis on problem solving. Students solve problems by developing software in an interpreted language (Python). Problems may include visualizing data, interfacing with hardware, or solving numeric problems. Covers procedural programming concepts including data types, variables, control structures, arrays, and data I/O. Covers object-oriented programming concepts including object creation and use, object interaction, and the design of simple classes. Covers software engineering concepts including testing, incremental development, understanding requirements, and teamwork. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Earth and Space Exploration | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s) with C or better: MAT 267, 272 or 275; PHY 131; PHY 132 OR MAT 267, 272 or 275; PHY 151   |

Studies development policy and foreign aid practiced since the 1970s and recent critique of these practices. Analyzes the mistakes made in the last 40 years, and potential for improving the practice of foreign aid. Contemporary issues in development economics, including the impacts of bad governance, foreign aid, corruption, war, military intervention and democracy on economic growth with emphasis on policy evaluations in health, education, microfinance and monitoring corruption.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Politics and Global Studies | 3     |                 | Pre-requisites: ENG 102, 105 or 108 with C or better; Minimum 30 hours; Credit is allowed for only SGS 350 or 394 (Prin of Econ Dev Global)   |
| SGS     | 360         | Cultural Aspects of Globalization                                   | Cultural aspects of globalization, starting with a theoretical discussion of what culture is and then weaving this discussion into an empirical examination of UNESCO's World Heritage program as a practical means of studying the role of culture in globalization. A number of questions guide our inquiry: What is culture? What forms does it take? Can culture be preserved? If so, what are the consequences? How is the UNESCO World Heritage Program structured? How does it conceive culture? What is its understanding of the global and the role of the local in it?                | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Politics and Global Studies | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): ENG 102, 105 or 108 with C or better; SGS 101 or 301; Minimum 30 hours; Credit is allowed for only SGS 360 or 394 (Cultural Aspects of Globalization)  |
| SGS     | 361         | World Society: Imagining the World                                  | Studies global processes by conceptualizing the world as a world society. This means that globalization is not just people being more interconnected enabling faster interactions. It suggests that interactions and institutions throughout the world are increasingly part of a whole, of a global consciousness, and while boundaries such as national boundaries are important, they do not delimit "society." The global is not just what is outside of national society or beyond the nation-state: it also constitutes what is inside the nation-state.                                  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Politics and Global Studies | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): minimum 45 hours; Credit is allowed for only SGS 361 or SGS 394 (World Society)  |

| SGS     | 370         | Geopolitics  | Geopolitics is a field that deals with war, conflict and the politics of animosity and violence. It calls special attention to the distribution of power on a global scale, and to the spatial scales at which power, authority and control operate. At one time, this involved studying how various "great powers" and "wise men" carved up the world according to their goals and interests. But power is everywhere! To name only a few examples, it is present in the ways that NGOs operate in conflict zones, in global health advocacy and awareness, in media coverage of distant catastrophes and seemingly imminent risks, and in disaster management and emergency response plans. Scholars in this field study topics such as war, diplomacy, conflict, migration, religious strife, terrorism and similar fields. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Politics and Global Studies | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): minimum 45 hours or junior standing; Credit is allowed for only SGS 370 or SGS 394 (Global Geopolitics)   |
| SGS     | 377         | Arizona, Immigration, Latinos and Politics             | Contemporary immigration and its related issues have generated significant debates, reforms and responses by government officials, businesses and private citizens, to name but a few in this country. This course provides a much-needed framework for understanding some of the immigration issues in Arizona and the country generally. It also focuses on some of the political responses by Latinos and their significant mobilization at the local, state and federal levels.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Politics and Global Studies | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): minimum 45 hours; Credit is allowed for only JUS 377 or POS 377 or SGS 377 or TCL 377 or HST/JUS/POS/SGS/TCL 394 (Arizona, Immigration, Latinos and Politics) |

| SGS     | 504         | The Individual As Decision Maker in Cross-Cultural Global Contexts  | Focuses on the role of the Individual decision maker in cross-cultural contexts, acting in the context of globally engaged institutions. The individual is virtually always embedded in an institutional environment whether as manager, planner, advocate, frequently acting as part of a team. It is recognized that the various agents/stakeholders involved in addressing an issue, negotiating a deal, in a global context, almost invariably hold significantly different worldviews, cultural norms and decision-making styles. Deals with the individual decision maker in both public and private decision-making milieus. Discusses modes of intervention and initiative. Addresses issues of leadership, reconciliation of different decision-making modes, and acting effectively in cross-cultural environments. Emphasizes decision making under high uncertainty, using case studies, e.g., pending nationalizations or privatization. | N                 | SEM               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences   | School of Politics and Global Studies    | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): SGS 501; SGS 502; Pre- or corequisite(s): SGS 503            |
| SGS     | 505         | Preparation for the Global Field Project                            | Prepares students for the global field project. In addition to scheduled classes, each student meets with her/his advisor at regular intervals during the semester to prepare for the Global Field Project. During the semester, students prepare a work plan for their Global Field Project, including objectives of the exercise, specifications of deliverables. Network building is an important secondary objective, and development of an esprit de corps among Global Studies masters students.  | N                 | SEM               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences   | School of Politics and Global Studies    | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): SGS 501; SGS 502; Pre- or corequisite(s): SGS 503; SGS 504   |

| SHS     | 526         | Launch to Clinical Methods in Audiology                           | In Launch-to-Clinic, students rotate through on-campus observations and group orientation to the ASU Speech and Hearing Clinic. Students learn the policies and procedures of the ASU Speech and Hearing Clinic, software specific to the clinic operations, report writing, and clinical documentation with practice to develop the skills needed to succeed in subsequent clinical rotations both on and off campus.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | College of Health Solutions | Department of Speech and Hearing Science | 1     |                 | Prerequisite(s): Audiology major; Credit is allowed for only SHS 526 or SHS 580 (Audio Clinical Observation) or SHS 580 (Audiology Observation) |
| SHS     | 530         | Development, Assessment, Intervention: Conception through 3 years | Covers development of children from conception to 3 years of age with a focus in early intervention. Includes child development of anatomical, neurophysiology, cognitive, motor, perceptual, speech, language and hearing aspects. Also addresses service delivery models in different contexts in children with atypical development in the different areas.  | N                 | LEL               | N               | GNA           | College of Health Solutions | Department of Speech and Hearing Science | 4     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student  |
| SHS     | 538         | Clinical Methods in Speech-Language Pathology                     | Provides the knowledge and skills in clinical methods for treatment and diagnosis in speech-language pathology. Topics cover essential information to participate in screening and prevention opportunities, to structure and implement therapy goals and strategies, to apply for internships, and to administer and interpret informal and formal diagnostic tests.   | Y                 | LEL               | Y               | GNA           | College of Health Solutions | Department of Speech and Hearing Science | 1     |                 | Prerequisite(s): MS Communication Disorders major.  |
| SHS     | 539         | Professional Issues in Speech-Language Pathology                  | Covers professional issues in speech-language pathology to ensure that students meet the professional knowledge requirements set forth in the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association (ASHA) certification standards. The topics cover essential information that the student needs to have in order to meet graduation requirements, comply with ASHA's ethical requirements, complete ASHA certification requirements, comply with Arizona state licensure requirements, prepare for a Clinical Fellowship Year and be involved in education and advocacy for the profession of Speech-Language Pathology. | N                 | LAB               | N               | GNA           | College of Health Solutions | Department of Speech and Hearing Science | 1     |                 | Prerequisite(s): MS Communication Disorders major. | SLB     | 514         | Contracts: Negotiation and Drafting in the Sports Industry | Provides a working or basic knowledge of contract law, with in-depth instruction with regard to negotiating and drafting in the sports context. As their final project, students select a player, coach, university or club and then negotiate a contract. Negotiation sessions are held during class sessions and students evaluate each other, as well as receiving evaluation from the professor. Replicates the negotiation process in the sports industry.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | College of Law              | Sandra Day O'Connor College of Law       | 2-4   |                 | Prerequisite(s): College of Law student; Credit is allowed for only SLB 514 or LAW 598 (Contracts in the Sports Industry)               |
| SLB     | 515         | Sports Business Strategy and Industry Dynamics             | Sports can involve a jog around campus or big business. Sports are interesting, important and a vivid context to learn about consumers, organizations, diverse stakeholders, media and entertainment, partnerships and sponsorship, highly competitive strategies in finance and marketing, managing community venues, big events, and other relevant business topics. Maintains a pragmatic, experiential, yet well-grounded focus, studying the role, nature and dynamics of sports business both in and around "sports industries" and in and around "conventional businesses." Builds and "tests" knowledge and exercise skills related to sports business analysis, decision making, communication and both strategy development and execution. Intellectually rigorous, yet fun. Develops a sophisticated, yet practical understanding of the nature, contexts and dynamics of sports business. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | College of Law              | Sandra Day O'Connor College of Law       | 2-4   |                 | Prerequisite(s): College of Law student; Credit is allowed for only SLB 515 or MKT 591 (Sports Business Strategy and Industry Dynamics) |
| SLB     | 516         | Sports Business Development                                | Develops an appreciation for and understanding of the multiple stakeholders and diverse interests in and around sports business, and of their constantly changing and interactive impact on sports business practice and performance. Gives broad exposure to the major revenue generating domains in the sports industry. Explores the fundamentals of marketing and applies those fundamentals to the domains of sponsorship, endorsement, media, ticketing, merchandising and fundraising as means to create and maintain revenue streams.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | College of Law              | Sandra Day O'Connor College of Law       | 1-3   |                 | Prerequisite(s): College of Law student; Credit is allowed for only SLB 516 or MKT 591 (Sports Business Development)                    |

| SLC     | 439         | Art in Exile: Vladimir Vladimirovich Nabokov               | In English. The scandalous success of Lolita (1955) allowed Vladimir Nabokov to retire from teaching at Cornell University and move to Switzerland to devote himself to fiction, translation, criticism and lepidoptery. This was only one of the many metamorphoses that Nabokov, a Russian noble, underwent while in exile, moving from Russia to the Crimea, Cambridge UK, Berlin, Paris, Cambridge MA, Ithaca, Hollywood and finally Montreux. Examines the Russian roots of Nabokov's Russian (in translation) and American novels about exile: his first novel, Mary (1926), The Defense (1929), Glory (1932), and his tribute to 19th-century Russian literature, The Gift (1938), which he considered his greatest Russian novel. These are followed by Lolita (1955), Pnin (1957) and Pale Fire (1962), his memoirs, Speak, Memory (1966), and some essays and short stories. Films include Lolita by Stanley Kubrick (1962) and Adrian Lyne (1997). | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of International Letters and Cultures | 3     | HU & L            | Prerequisite(s): ENG 102 or 105 or 108 with C or better; Credit is allowed for only RUS 439 or SLC 439 or ENG/RUS/SLC 494 (Art in Exile: Vladimir Vladimirovich Nabokov)                     |

| SLC     | 551         | Global Approaches to Translation           | Familiarize students with various approaches to translation practice. Examines issues related to the cultural role of translation. Students [re]prepare a translation, justification of translation choices, and discussion of the complexities posed by the translation. Readings address a broad array of translation theories, with most focused on translation as a globally theorized phenomenon in the 20th and 21st centuries. Readings and discussions focus on how one translates, and on translation as a culture-making enterprise inextricably tied to the questions of who translates, in what context, for whom, and to what ends. Students understand translation theories from different eras and cultures; understand how translation is implicated in different forms of intercultural contact (colonialism, commerce, proselytization); gain experience translating texts from a source language into English; and can explain why they translated the way they did. | N                 | RSC               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of International Letters and Cultures | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student   |
| SLC     | 557         | Computer-Assisted Language Learning        | Explores the field of computer-assisted language learning. Traces the development of computer-assisted language learning (CALL) over the last three decades. Focuses on research that explores how computer technology can help facilitate second language development; relies primarily on empirical data to do so. Examine established as well as new research methods in CALL. Participants participate in one research study and apply theoretical and practical aspects of CALL in these projects.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of International Letters and Cultures | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student; Credit is allowed for only APL 557 or ENG 557 or LIN 591 (Intro to Computer Assisted Language Learning) or SLC 557 |

| SOS     | 117         | Food System Sustainability   | Food systems are particularly important for human societies to sustain and are also particularly vulnerable to multiple threats related to the interconnected sustainability challenges we face. Introduces the concepts and issues involved in food systems sustainability. Divided into four modules, the first three of which address the other systems with which food systems interact--socio-ecological, socio-cultural and socio-technical systems. The final module addresses the future of food systems. Teaches students about the main issues in food system sustainability and allows students to enhance their critical thinking skills by applying them to the many sustainability challenges associated food system activities via solutions-based learning including the social, ecological, economic and institutional dimensions. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability     | School of Sustainability                     | 3     |                 |   |

| SOS     | 171         | The Thread of Energy  | Follows the thread of energy through every aspect of our lives. Discusses the technical, social, legal, and policy contexts of all energy resources, including present and unconventional fossil fuels, nuclear power, and renewable resources. Addresses energy use throughout history, the influence of energy on quality of life, the role it plays in political strategies and environmental quality, how it shapes our neighborhoods and cities, its contribution to our personal comfort and national security, and how its importance is reflected in the worlds of business and the humanities. Its dual role is as a stand-alone introduction to energy, and as a first step to more advanced studies of energy in the natural, technical, and social sciences. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     | SB & G          | Credit is allowed for only GCU or SOS 171  |
| SOS     | 181         | Technological, Social, and Sustainable Systems                | Introduces the importance and role of technological, social, and sustainable systems in the modern world. Provides a framework for the theory and practice of sustainable engineering.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     | HU              | Credit is allowed for only SOS, FSE or CEE 181   |
| SOS     | 182         | Water Planet  | Overview of the processes that control water supply to natural ecosystems and human civilizations. Part I introduces the basic science that helps us understand the water planet, including the hydrologic cycle, glaciers and ice; rivers, oceans, and natural hazards associated with water such as flooding, landsliding and tsunamis. Part II covers some of the management and resource allocation topics that face humanity today, including droughts, groundwater contamination, impacts on fisheries, conflicts over water, patterns of water use, and effects of global climate change on future water supplies. Uses water issues facing Arizona and California as examples.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 4     | SQ              | Credit is allowed for only GLG 108 or SOS 182  |
| SOS     | 191         | First-Year Seminar  | Small course emphasizing student-faculty discussion and interaction. Required for first-year students. Must have taken 25 or fewer credit hours. Consulting an academic advisor before enrolling is recommended.   | Y                 | SEM               | Y               | OPT           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 1-3   |                 |  |

| SOS     | 201         | Introduction to ASU and Sustainability                        | Introduces all ASU transfer students to the unique elements, culture, challenges and opportunities of the university.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | YGB           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 1     |                 | Pre-requisites: Sustainability major; Minimum 24 hours   |
| SOS     | 211         | Calculus and Probability for the Life and Social Sciences     | Introduces two of the most important and useful mathematical frameworks used to study natural and social phenomena: probability and calculus. Probability is used to describe an attitude of mind toward some proposition whose truth is not certain. Calculus is the branch of mathematics used to study the behavior and dynamics of functions: calculus is the mathematical study of change. Students gain the basic competence needed for applying probability and calculus when thinking about and research problems in sustainability. Focuses on and discusses applications, the meaning of important concepts, the origins of the rules of derivation and integration, and logic behind why the methods work.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     | MA              | Pre-requisite: AML 100 or SOS 101 with B or better   |
| SOS     | 212         | Calculus-Based Modeling for the Life and Social Sciences      | Introduces the evaluation and construction of mathematical models used in the life and social sciences. Includes the basic steps in developing a model, analyzing it, and testing it with actual data. Covers the first steps concerning how to use formal mathematical techniques including developing equation-based relationships, plotting graphs, linear regression, and solving equations using computer software.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): SOS 211; Credit is allowed for only SOS 212 or SOS 294 (Intro to Math Tools & Modeling)   |
| SOS     | 220         | Systems Thinking  | Introduces systems thinking and complexity science, with an emphasis on analytical relevance for thinking about a myriad of issues involved in sustainability. Hones students' abilities to read critically, articulate their views clearly, and think about the many systems that shape their lives.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): PUP 190 or SOS 111 with C or better; SOS 110 with C or better   |
| SOS     | 230         | Professional Skills in Sustainability                         | Builds interpersonal competence, which is a key competence in sustainability. Students work on a small hands-on sustainability project in order to practice professional skills in four domains: teamwork, project management, self-directed and continuous learning, and stakeholder engagement. Students learn how to effectively collaborate in teams, use project management tools to achieve quality products in time, innovate their ways of learning, and create productive dialogue with stakeholders.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 1     |                 | Prerequisite(s): PUP 190 or SOS 111 with C or better; SOS 110 with C or better   |
| SOS     | 231         | Careers in Sustainability                                     | Aids in career exploration and development for School of Sustainability majors. Explores values, motivations and career options. Students learn how to approach the job search and how to communicate sustainability to employers; also how to prepare a quality résumé, cover letter, and gain a better understanding of the benefits of networking.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 1     |                 | Prerequisite(s): BA or BS Sustainability major; PUP 190 or SOS 111 with C or better; SOS 110 with C or better; minimum 45 hours  |
| SOS     | 232         | Professional Skills in Sustainability Practice                | Students learn how to effectively and compassionately communicate, engage in collaborative teamwork, use project management tools to achieve quality products on time, innovate their ways of self-directed and continuous learning, engage with stakeholders on solutions, and ensure mindful self-care. Students work on a sustainability project, practicing this set of professional skills in a real-world context.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): ENG 101, 105, or 107 with C or better; PUP 190 or SOS 111 with C or better; SOS 110 with C or better  |
| SOS     | 272         | Environmental Justice   | Surveys key environmental justice issues and movements. Uses interdisciplinary social science perspectives to review and analyze U.S. and international case studies.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     | SB              | Credit is allowed for only ASB 272 or SOS 272  |

| SOS     | 309         | History and Philosophy of Sustainability     | Examines sustainability issues in a broadly interdisciplinary way, but with a special emphasis on humanities perspectives, focusing on human ideas, values and institutions as they have evolved over time.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): ENG 102 or 105 or 108 with C or better; minimum 25 hours; Credit is allowed for only HST 308 or PHI 322 or SOS 309 or BIO/HST/PHI/SOS 394 (History & Philosophy of Sustainability)   |
| SOS     | 310         | Equity, Justice and Sustainability           | Introduces the "social justice" aspects of sustainability science and practice. Sustainability problems are a special class of problems arising from a complex set of issues spread across time, space and institutional scales. These problems can threaten underlying social, economic and ecological systems which are highly intertwined and interdependent. Explore these issues through study of both theory and practice.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): PUP 190 or SOS 111 with C or better; SOS 110 with C or better  |
| SOS     | 311         | Future Thinking and Strategies               | Offers a critical introduction to future-oriented theories and methods. Explores anticipation in contemporary society through a series of cases studies that probe real-world sustainability issues and how the future is created and contested. By characterizing and critiquing future-oriented practices across governmental, academic and private sectors, offers a critical perspective on different methodological approaches and the implications of their use.                                  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): PUP 190 or SOS 111 with C or better; SOS 110 with C or better  |

Allows non-engineering students to better grapple with the issues that surround sustainable energy issues. Covers the most common methods of electricity generation as well as renewable technologies and fuels.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): minimum 45 hours; Credit is allowed for only SOS 314 or SOS 394 (Basic Energy Science)   |
| SOS     | 315         | Energy Policy                                | Examines the regulation of energy production and consumption in the U.S. at the federal, state and local levels. Identifies energy stakeholders in the U.S. and examines how they have shaped U.S. policies around energy. Explains past and current U.S. energy policies and how energy needs have shaped U.S. relations with other countries. Compares U.S. energy policies to that of other countries in the world, as well as how Arizona's energy policies compare to other states within the U.S. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): minimum 45 hours; Credit is allowed for only PAF 394 (Energy Policy) or POS 394 (Energy Policy) or SGS 315 or SGS 394 (Energy Policy) or SOS 315 or SOS 394 (Energy Policy)  |

| SOS     | 328         | Sustainability and Enterprise                                     | Examines the evolving interface between sustainability and human enterprise. Explores and reviews key fundamental concepts in the sustainability arena, including economic and scientific drivers and select historical and structural aspects that create the current context for the enterprise and sustainability interface found today. Delves into more specific case studies of attempts by current businesses to become greener and more sustainable, exploring challenges and opportunities that are commonly found as well as how decisions are often made in today's business settings and by whom. Explores alternative enterprise models and examples of businesses that are using the current context to redefine the sustainability and enterprise. Given the emergent nature of this effort, uses timely and real-world examples from current events where possible. Explores and applies an integrated approach to sustainability and enterprise. Readings include popular texts, original research articles and current events. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): Sustainability or Business (Sustainability) major; SOS 110 and 111 (or PUP 190) with C or better; OR Non-Sustainability major with 2 courses: SOS 100, 110, 111 (PUP 190), SOS 300 with C or better   |

| SOS     | 374         | Earth's Critical Zone   | The Earth's near surface environment (the "critical zone") supports most life and is the dynamic interface between the solid Earth and its fluid envelopes where much of the geologic record is produced. We now know that we face rapid climate change and the consequences of changes in land use, water resources, and ecosystems. Critical to planning a response to, or mitigation of, environmental change is understanding how the Earth surface works. Focuses on how changes to the environment manifest themselves in the critical zone--in the form and function of the Earth's surface (landforms, water resources, soils, ecosystems). Offers a quantitative introduction to the form and function of the processes impacting the Earth's critical zone to build an understanding of the interactions of physical, chemical and biotic processes in shaping the surface and determining fluid, solute and sediment fluxes.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisites with C or better: GLG 101 & 103 or SES 121 & 123; MAT 170 or 171 or 210 or 251 or 265 or 270; PHY 101 or 111 or 121 or 150 or CHM 101 or 107 or 113 or 114 or BIO 100 or 181 or 182 or 281 or 282. | SOS     | 375         | Humans and the Environment: What's the Connection?                | How do diverse human groups across global ecosystems (desert, tropics, arctic, alpine, urban) interact with and adapt to their environments and how are these relationships changing in response to globalization, climate change and other social, historical and political-economic drivers? Cultures situated in landscapes are the basis for an incredible global diversity of worldviews and behaviors that in turn affect how humans experience and "use" their environments. This course will provide an introduction to current and benchmark literature and methods in environmental and ecological anthropology that address people-environment interactions.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     | (L or SB) & G   | Prerequisite(s): minimum 45 hours; Credit is allowed for only ASB 375 or SOS 375 or ASB 394 (People: Environment Connections in Anthropology) or ASB 494 (Ecological and Environmental Anthropology)   |
| SOS     | 380         | Entrepreneurship for American Indian Sustainability               | Concentrates on developing a product or service idea, creating an entrepreneurial model and plan to implement the product or service in the context of an AI sustainable venture (profit and nonprofit). Begins with a review of established AI context with additional focus on tribal economic development throughout the course. The innovation process executed during the semester and the resulting product/service ideas and choices. Students are also encouraged to embark on new venture ideas as well. Students are then introduced to all aspects of venture (profit and non-profit) and entrepreneurial model creation, including strategy, product/service development planning, marketing, operations, alliances, management, finance and investment. In parallel, teams continue refinement and, where possible, further prototyping of the idea they chose from the previous semester and/or creation of new high-impact, high-potential ideas.   | N                 | LEL               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): ENG 102, 105, or 108 with C or better; Credit is allowed for only AIS 385 or AIS 394 (Entrepreneurship for American Indian Sustainability) or SOS 380   |

| SOS     | 429         | Human Impacts on Ecosystem Functioning            | Explores our current understanding of how humans are impacting the functioning of ecosystems and how changes in ecosystems would affect provisioning of ecosystem services and ultimately human well-being. The two primary drivers of ecosystem change are growth of the human population and increased consumption per capita. These drivers affect the Earth's cycles of carbon, nitrogen and water, as well as regional and global-scale changes in biodiversity and climate. Includes an in-depth discussion of scenarios for the next 50 and 100 years, which articulate costs and benefits of alternative development pathways in terms of climate change, food production, clean water and biodiversity. Scenarios of change in biodiversity lead to the topic of the consequences of biodiversity change for the functioning of ecosystems from the point of view of their productivity and stability. Human activities have disrupted several biogeochemical cycles including nitrogen and carbon cycles. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): BIO 320 (or SOS 326); Credit is allowed for only BIO 429, BIO 528, SOS 429, SOS 528, or SOS 494/598 (Human Impacts on Ecosystem Functioning), or BIO 494/598 (Human Impacts on Ecosystem Functioning)                                      |

| SOS     | 435         | U.S. Energy: Pathways to Sustainability           | Organized around four mores of energy and environmental policy: energy supply, technology for efficiency, environmental sustainability and infrastructure. Also incorporates the wider context of energy and the environment in the society in which we live, taking into account our historic past and future potential life experience with energy availability and use. Through critical examination and analysis of these mores, students apply knowledge to the creation of a comprehensive energy and environmental policy plan that addresses past conditions, present states and future possibilities.  | N                 | SEM               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Credit is allowed for only SOS 435 or SOS 494 (Energy and Environmental Policy) or SOS 494 (US Energy: Pathways to Sustainability) or SOS 555 or SOS 594 (Energy & Environmental Policy)  |
| SOS     | 441         | Mathematical Concepts and Tools in Sustainability | Explores various mathematical analysis and models pertinent to sustainability science drawn from both social and natural sciences and introduced in a problem-based context. Demonstrates basic concepts from game theory such as pure-strategy and mixed-strategy Nash equilibriums in such classic games as prisoner's dilemma, hawk-dove, coordination. Explores the evolutionary dynamics of these games through the replicator equations. Studies important concepts of stability and regime shift for selected problems. | SOS     | 456         | Human Rights and Sustainability                   | Addresses the connections between human rights and environmental sustainability. Legal and scholarly approaches linking these areas present new perspectives for addressing some of the greatest challenges of our time, given the important resource dimensions of economic and social rights and the human dimensions of sustainability. Yet human rights demands and environmental concerns are not always in harmony. Explores these tensions and opportunities by examining three substantive areas: urban ecology and human rights, the human right to food, and the human rights implications of extractive industries such as oil and mining. Following an introduction to the key concepts of human rights and sustainability, explores the substantive areas through theoretical and empirical readings on each; grassroots accounts of struggles over environment-related human rights; and selections from literature and film that illustrate the environmental justice issues at stake.               | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     | (L or SB) & G   | Prerequisite(s): ENG 102 or 105 or 108 with C or better; minimum 36 hours. | SOS     | 467         | Art and Ecology                            | Designed for students with advanced independent studio art practices or sustainability studies students who have an interest in the way that their lives and practices engage environments. Through readings, slide presentations, discussions, guest visits, hands-on activities and screenings, explores the work of many contemporary ecological artists engaging with environments and environmental issues from a multitude of angles. Artists engage land remediation, agriculture, socio-ecological justice, sustainable materials, landscape design and much more. As cultural workers must be informed, the course content addresses some basic literacy with regard to environmental concerns and shares examples of realized accessible sustainable solutions. In addition to learning about ecologies and artists, students complete three art or research projects, inspired by assignments.     | N                 | STO               | Y               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): minimum 45 hours; Credit is allowed for only ART 467 or ART 494 (Art and Ecology) or ART 567 or ART 598 (Art and Ecology) or SOS 467 or SOS 494 (Art and Ecology) or SOS 567 or SOS 598 (Art and Ecology)                                    |

| SOS     | 502         | Tools and Techniques for Sustainability    | Forthcoming federal legislation and Executive Orders will set new standards for operational efficiencies, energy and water conservation, use of renewable energy sources, and waste minimization in the Army and Army National Guard. Tools and Techniques for Sustainability presents a systems approach to meet those standards by integrating principles of sustainability into existing Army policies, procedures, and reporting systems. The course features the Framework for Sustainable Strategic Development as an organizing framework to analyze systems and develop strategic plans to move toward sustainability.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): Global Sustainability Leadership certificate student; Pre-or co-requisite: SOS 501   |
| SOS     | 503         | Operationalizing Sustainability            | Sustainability is a means to addressing the significant physical, statutory, and regulatory requirements that affect and can encumber the Army's ability to train Soldiers at ranges and maneuver areas across the United States. With hundreds of imperiled species proposed for federal protection in the next few years, threatened and endangered species and sensitive habitat will continue to be a concern. Participants in Operationalizing Sustainability will explore how innovative training practices, improved land and natural resource management practices, and enhanced community relationships can ensure continued access to the land and water assets needed to maintain readiness and can help to 'win hearts and minds.' Proactive approaches to promoting well-being for soldiers, families, civilians, neighbors, and communities, both at installations and downrange, are stressed. | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): Sustainability Leadership certificate student; SOS 501; SOS 502  |

Presents approaches to implement high-performance sustainable building design, construction, operation and management, maintenance, and deconstruction. Also covers cost-effective, innovative strategies, such as highly reflective and vegetated roofs, to minimize consumption of energy, water, and materials.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): Sustainability Leadership certificate student; SOS 501; SOS 502  |

| SOS     | 505         | Sustainable Military Acquisition and Logistics                     | Sustainable Military Acquisition and Logistics provides practical approaches to applying sustainability principles and practices to all areas of procurement, acquisition, and logistics. Through weapon systems acquisition or procurement of installation goods and services, the Army hopes to drive innovation and promote sustainability while reducing costs. The inclusions of energy and resource efficiency and other sustainability criteria in acquisition and procurement decisions can reduce long-term operation and maintenance costs, conserve resources, and continue to expand innovation throughout the supply chain. This course introduces the application of sustainability principles to procurement and acquisition, transportation, and materiel. The use of life cycle analysis and multicriteria assessment for all 10 classes of supply is also featured significantly in the course. | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): Sustainability Leadership certificate student; SOS 501; SOS 502  |

| SOS     | 518         | Uncertainty and Decision Making                                    | Knowledge is always incomplete, yet decisions must be made. Explores uncertainty and its relation to decision making, with a particular focus on the ways that science and science-derived information is applied with the intent of improving decisions. Explores the many meanings and origins of uncertainty, using theoretical and case-based approaches. A central theme is the relation among uncertainty, scientific prediction, and decision making, especially in politically charged issues, for example as related to management of the environment. Ultimately understands how effective decisions can be made in the face of inevitable uncertainties and contested knowledge.   | N                 | SEM               | N               | OPT           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate. Not a "methods" class because no specific method is taught in depth. Instead, it is an initial introduction to the research design process and is intended as a platform through which students develop the skills to appreciate and contextualize the approaches taken (and methods used) by others, and during which they can identify the types of specific training they require as they define their own research.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Pre- or corequisite(s): SOS 510; Credit is allowed for only SOS 520 or SOS 598 (Intro Design/Mthds)   |

| SOS     | 527         | Environmental Ethics and Policy Goals             | Advanced seminar in applied environmental ethics, focusing on the most influential and policy-relevant approaches in the field of environmental ethics. Core topics include the historical and philosophical foundations of alternative understandings of environmental responsibility; the debate over utility and preservation in environmental policy argument; and the interplay of ethical principles, scientific knowledge and societal priorities in environmental decision making. Consideration of the ethical and value dimensions of biodiversity conservation, wilderness protection, environmental valuation, environmental activism, climate change and sustainability, among other challenges.   | N                 | SEM               | N               | OPT           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student; Credit is allowed for only BIO 527 or SOS 527 or BIO 591 (Environ Ethics & Policy Goals)  |
| SOS     | 528         | Human Impacts on Ecosystem Functioning            | Explores our current understanding of how humans are impacting the functioning of ecosystems and how changes in ecosystems would affect provisioning of ecosystem services and ultimately human well-being. The two primary drivers of ecosystem change are growth of the human population and increased consumption per capita. These drivers affect the Earth's cycles of carbon, nitrogen and water, as well as regional and global-scale changes in biodiversity and climate. Includes an in-depth discussion of scenarios for the next 50 and 100 years, which articulate costs and benefits of alternative development pathways in terms of climate change, food production, clean water and biodiversity. Scenarios of change in biodiversity lead to the topic of the consequences of biodiversity change for the functioning of ecosystems from the point of view of their productivity and stability. Human activities have disrupted several biogeochemical cycles including nitrogen and carbon cycles. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): Degree- or Nondegree-seeking graduate; Credit is allowed for only BIO 429, BIO 528, SOS 429, SOS 528, or SOS 494/598 (Human Impacts on Ecosystem Functioning), or BIO 494/598 (Human Impacts on Ecosystem Functioning)                     |
| SOS     | 530         | International Development and Sustainability      | Historical roots of the idea of development; economic theories of growth and their implications for sustainability; interrelationship among population growth, food security, poverty, inequality, urbanization, technological change, international trade, and environmental change at local, regional and global scale.   | N                 | SEM               | N               | OPT           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student  |
| SOS     | 531         | Achieving Career Success in Sustainability        | The need for sustainability-minded workers and leaders has never been more important than right now. Yet sustainability as a career track is still very new and means different things to different people. Students explore their own ambitions and "personal brands," to shape their work personas, to model the behaviors and competencies that build long-term career success, and to uncover the sustainability potential of any job, whether or not "sustainability" is in the job title.   | N                 | SEM               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 1     |                 | Prerequisite(s): SOS 510; Credit is allowed for only SOS 531 or SOS 598 (Achieving Career Success in Sustainability)  |
| SOS     | 532         | Sustainable Urban Dynamics                        | Human and physical processes shaping urban ecologies and environments; human-environment interactions in the context of an urban region; effect of the institution and regulatory framework on the ability of social and urban-ecological systems to be resilient and sustainable; urban design, materials, transport, planning, and regulation.  | N                 | SEM               | N               | OPT           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): (degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student; Credit is allowed for only ASB 533 or SOS 532)   |

| SOS     | 536         | Food System Sustainability                        | Broad view of food systems and the sustainability of such systems. Concepts, theory, methods and empirical analyses from diverse disciplines, including agro-ecology, agronomy, political science, agricultural economics, geography, anthropology, and food and nutrition studies. Students choose a theme that is a core concern to food system sustainability and pursue that theme in diverse course activities and through engaging in the broader food system we are embedded in as residents in the Phoenix area. Culminates with a term paper/project that synthesizes experience and knowledge, providing a unique perspective on their role in food systems.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student  |
| SOS     | 540         | Statistical Modeling for Sustainability           | Equips students with sufficient knowledge of statistical theory and methods of applied data analysis to begin conducting empirical analyses in their domains of interest; bring students to a high level of competency in using a cutting-edge statistical software package (Stata) for data management and data analysis tasks; expose students to applications of statistical methods in the economics/policy/social science sustainability literatures in order to develop an understanding for how statistical tools are operationalized in the research world; and develop an appreciation for the careful synthesis of social and natural science theory, knowledge of data and its limitations and command of statistical tools that constitute quality empirical research.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 4     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or non-degree-seeking graduate student; Credit allowed for only AML, ESS or SOS 540  |
| SOS     | 541         | Mathematical Concepts and Tools in Sustainability | Explores various mathematical analysis and models pertinent to sustainability science drawn from both social and natural sciences and introduced in a problem-based context. Demonstrates basic concepts from game theory such as pure-strategy and mixed-strategy Nash equilibriums in such classic games as prisoner's dilemma, hawk-dove, coordination. Explores the evolutionary dynamics of these games through the replicator equations. Studies important concepts of stability and regime shift for selected problems. Also discusses some basic solution concepts in cooperative game theory (depending on interest and time).   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate. | SOS     | 545         | Organizations, Sustainability & Public Policy            | Sustainability concerns are fast becoming a strategic issue for organizations in all sectors. In the last ten years, numerous organizations have completely redefined their business strategies in line with principles of sustainability by balancing the requirements for economic development, environmental quality and social justice, and governments worldwide are developing programs and policies that encourage these activities. Explores the connections between organization strategy--especially within the private sector, sustainability and public policy. Through a combination of practical cases, readings and lectures, class sessions engage students in discussions aimed at developing sustainability assessment models. Additionally, students apply new strategy tools that incorporate principles of proactive environmental management and social responsibility designed to enhance the public good.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate; Credit is allowed for only PAF or SOS 545  |
| SOS     | 546         | Life Cycle Assessment for Civil Systems                  | Covers fundamental and advanced concepts of the life cycle assessment framework exploring products, services, activities and infrastructure systems. Examines key concepts for system boundary selection, functional unit selection, inventorying, impact assessment and interpretation stages with a focus on energy and environmental assessment. Advanced concepts include allocation of effects, problem formulation for assessing footprints versus decisions or policies, and assessment of infrastructure interdependencies and supply chains. Exposes tools and data sources and presents approaches for evaluation of sensitivity and uncertainty of results. Encourages students with broad sustainability interests to enroll and explore how life cycle assessment can aid their work by shifting their views from direct to cradle-to-grave effects.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate. | SOS     | 547         | Urban Infrastructure Anatomy and Sustainable Development | Understanding how built environment infrastructure systems interact with ecosystem services is critical for policies and decisions directing urban sustainability. Brings together students from several disciplines to develop a semester-long research project focused on a particular urban sustainability problem in Phoenix. During the semester, students are given background on how infrastructure systems work and are interdependent, and explore tools and methods for urban sustainability assessment with peers from several disciplines. As a class, students evaluate a particular urban sustainability problem for Phoenix, interact with local policy and decision makers in developing solutions, and present their findings at the end of the semester to the ASU community.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate. | SOS     | 552         | Advanced Earth Systems Engineering and Management        | Advanced introduction to earth systems engineering and management, and the technological, economic and cultural systems underlying the terraformed Earth.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Credit is allowed for only CEE 581 or SOS 552  |
| SOS     | 553         | Changing Human-Nature Relationships                      | Explores key concepts in Western and non-Western thinking now intersecting in the Anthropocene to influence human interactions with and descriptions of Nature. Humans may protect Nature, but simultaneously use/overuse resources and drive change in social-ecological systems. Examines evolving assumptions about Nature, values/world views, progress, change, uncertainty, rationality, knowledge, tradeoffs and control/management, using a range of theoretical lenses (e.g., environmental/ecological/historical anthropology, culture, geography, ecology, economics, institutions, economic development, complex systems and sustainability science). Also studies a set of iconic Human-Environmental challenges and examines how theories and assumptions explain behaviors and human, ecological and policy outcomes. In turn, focuses on lessons that emerge for interdisciplinary scholarship. Encourages students to apply methods, concepts and theories to their evolving research questions. | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student; Credit is allowed for only ASB 530 or SOS 553  |
| SOS     | 555         | US Energy: Pathways to Sustainability                    | Organized around four mores of energy and environmental policy: energy supply, technology for efficiency, environmental sustainability and infrastructure. Also incorporates the wider context of energy and the environment in the society in which we live, taking into account our historic past and future potential life experience with energy availability and use. Through critical examination and analysis of these mores, students apply knowledge to the creation of a comprehensive energy and environmental policy plan that addresses past conditions, present states and future possibilities.  | N                 | SEM               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate. | SOS     | 567         | Art and Ecology  | Designed for students with advanced independent studio art practices or sustainability studies students who have an interest in the way that their lives and practices engage environments. Through readings, slide presentations, discussions, guest visits, hands-on activities and screenings, explores the work of many contemporary ecological artists engaging with environments and environmental issues from a multitude of angles. Artists engage land remediation, agriculture, socio-ecological justice, sustainable materials, landscape design and much more. As cultural workers must be informed, the course content addresses some basic literacy with regard to environmental concerns and shares examples of realized accessible sustainable solutions. In addition to learning about ecologies and artists, students complete three art or research projects, inspired by assignments. | N                 | STO               | Y               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student; Credit is allowed for only ART 467 or ART 494 (Art and Ecology) or ART 567 or ART 598 (Art and Ecology) or SOS 467 or SOS 494 (Art and Ecology) or SOS 567 or SOS 598 (Art and Ecology)Pre-req for SOS 567 |
| SOS     | 570         | Fundamentals of CAS Science  | Many phenomena of critical relevance to human society are dynamic systems that change over individual and evolutionary time scales, and are highly interactive, both within and between systems. That is, they are complex adaptive systems (CAS), and thus share isomorphic properties like near-decomposability, hierarchical organization, scale-free networks, self-organized criticality, and emergence. Fundamentals of CAS science explores the diverse, interdisciplinary applications of a complex adaptive systems across the social, behavioral, and life sciences.  | N                 | SEM               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student; Credit is allowed for only ASM, BIO, or SOS 570  |
| SOS     | 571         | Sustainable Energy I: Technologies and Systems                       | Provides a primer on the scientific, technological and social aspects of energy. Three core modules: (1) primer on the physics of energy, (2) a review of power systems and electricity generation technologies, and (3) a review of transportation systems and fuel/vehicle technologies. Although the class focuses on energy technology, it also incorporates discussions of the human dimensions of energy systems.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student   |
| SOS     | 572         | Sustainable Energy II: Transitions                                   | Follows the thread of energy transitions through every aspect of our lives. Stresses the technological, economic, social and political contexts of energy transitions. Addresses energy use throughout history, the influence of energy on quality of life, how energy use has influenced the process of urbanization, and how considerations of access to and control of energy sources shapes geopolitical strategies. Draws on insights garnered by research in human ecology, anthropology, archaeology, economics, historiography, natural science and engineering as to the role energy use, and technological change involving the use of technology, has played in human development.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): SOS 571   |

Provides a basis for understanding the intersection of social, political, cultural, economic and technical dynamics of existing and emerging energy system possibilities, emphasizing the roles of human decision making as well as new scientific and technological developments. Emphasizes the development of sophisticated competency in several broad thematic capacities that are required to understand, engage with and provide thought leadership in the ongoing challenge of creating and cultivating sustainable energy systems.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): SOS 572   |
| SOS     | 574         | Sustainable Energy Analytics in Context                              | Addresses the primary metrics, data sources and methodologies used to measure sustainable energy, including how they are used to track progress toward sustainability goals and shape public policies. Covers the metrics for comparing the cost, efficiency, social equity and environmental impacts of various energy sources, and issues pertaining to product life cycle evaluation. These metrics provide the foundation for assessing the relative merits of various energy and production options based a variety of possible criteria. In addition to imparting factual knowledge for quantitatively evaluating a multiplicity of energy sources and systems and their impact on the environment, builds skills in research, comparative analysis and critical thinking that catalyze a lifetime of engagement with the complex and evolving issues surrounding sustainability.                   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability | School of Sustainability | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): SOS 571   |

| SOS     | 581         | Synthesis for Sustainability Research  | Aimed at students who have already gained training in content areas and are writing their research or projects for publication in peer-reviewed journals or other outlets. Challenges students to link their own research to other disciplines and the broader field of sustainability research.  | N                 | RSC               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability    | School of Sustainability                 | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): SOS 510; SOS 520; SOS 525; Corequisite(s): SOS 596 or 599   |
| SOS     | 582         | Project Management for Sustainability  | Provides exposure to the tasks and challenges facing project managers, i.e., those people responsible for the vital function of managing complex projects in sustainability in today's environment. Successful project managers have the abilities and skills to simultaneously manage people, schedules, risks, and resources while delivering successful outcomes. This course is a prerequisite for the MSUS culminating experience.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | School of Sustainability    | School of Sustainability                 | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): Graduate Sustainability major; SOS 510. | SOS     | 584         | Internship                             | Structured practical experience following a contract or plan, supervised by faculty and practitioners.  | Y                 | PRA               | Y               | Z1            | School of Sustainability    | School of Sustainability                 | 1-12  |                 |  |
| SOS     | 589         | Community of Graduate Student Scholars | Provides the opportunity to develop new skills, to foster cohort building, to interact with other students and faculty, and to network and build support with the alumni network. Overseen by a faculty member but is primarily directed by the students. All MA or MS students take this course each semester. Although there is an overall structure as demonstrated in the course schedule, the specific content of the course varies each semester depending on the needs and interests of the students.  | N                 | LEC               | Y               | YGB           | School of Sustainability    | School of Sustainability                 | 1     |                 | Prerequisite(s): School of Sustainability graduate students  |
| SOS     | 590         | Reading and Conference                 | Independent study in which a student meets regularly with a faculty member to discuss assignments. Course may include such assignments as intensive reading in a specialized area, writing a synthesis of literature on a specified topic, or writing a literature review of a topic.   | Y                 | IND               | Y               | Z1            | School of Sustainability    | School of Sustainability                 | 1-12  |                 |  |

Replaces arbitrary enrollment in reading and conference, research, thesis, dissertation, etc. Used by students when taking comprehensive examinations, defending theses or dissertations, or fulfilling the continuous enrollment requirement in doctoral programs. Credit is not awarded, and no grade is assigned.   | N                 | LEC               | Y               | Z3            | School of Sustainability    | School of Sustainability                 | 1     |                 |  |
| SOS     | 596         | Capstone: Scientific Paper             | MA/MS students are required to devote six hours to conducting research and writing a scientific paper of publishable quality based on the research. The paper topic, the research methodology, and the written format must be approved by the supervisory committee. Students must decide if they will complete the paper on their own or as a group.   | N                 | RSC               | Y               | GNA           | School of Sustainability    | School of Sustainability                 | 1-6   |                 | Prerequisite(s): Sustainability MA or MS student; SOS 510  |

| SOS     | 656         | Human Rights and Sustainability        | Addresses the connections between human rights and environmental sustainability. Legal and scholarly approaches linking these areas present new perspectives for addressing some of the greatest challenges of our time, given the important resource dimensions of economic and social rights and the human dimensions of sustainability. Yet human rights demands and environmental concerns are not always in harmony. Explores these tensions and opportunities by examining three substantive areas: urban ecology and human rights, the human right to food, and the human rights implications of extractive industries such as oil and mining. Following an introduction to the key concepts of human rights and sustainability, explores the substantive areas through theoretical and empirical readings on each; grassroots accounts of struggles over environment-related human rights; and selections from literature and film that illustrate the environmental justice issues at stake. | N                 | SEM               | N               | GNA           | School of Sustainability    | School of Sustainability                 | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate. | SPA     | 401         | Spanish Oral Communication for the Professions      | Students practice their Spanish oral communication skills in the context of serving U.S. Latino clients in the community (e.g., schools, government agencies, social work settings, medical settings) or reporting on issues of interest to the Hispanic community. Students gain practice in speaking varieties of Spanish that would assist their communication with monolingual Spanish-speaking Latino clients in formal (professional) and informal contexts in the public sector. Students gain experience in giving public talks, reporting on cultural events and issues in the Hispanic community, participating in simulated workplace exercises requiring the ability to carry out various language functions appropriately in different contexts.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Integrative Sciences & Arts  | College of Integrative Sciences and Arts         | 3     |                 | Pre-requisite: SPA 314 or 316; Students who have credit for SPA 494 (Spanish Oral Comm. for Profes) may not enroll in SPA 401       |
| SPA     | 402         | Written Communication for the Professions           | Students hone their Spanish literacy (reading and writing) skills in the context of serving U.S. Latino clients in the community (e.g., schools, government agencies, social work settings, medical settings) or reporting on issues of interest to the Hispanic community. Students read and understand documents in Spanish that they would come across in the process of assisting monolingual Spanish-speakers in the public sector or doing research on the Hispanic community (e.g., birth certificates, academic transcripts, medical reports, criminology documents, newspaper or magazine articles). Students gain practice in creating written documents in Spanish that would assist their communication with Latino clients in formal (professional) and informal contexts or that would allow them to report intelligently on issues of interest to the Hispanic community. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Integrative Sciences & Arts  | College of Integrative Sciences and Arts         | 3     |                 | Pre-requisite: SPA 314 or 316; Students who have credit for SPA 494 (Spanish Written Communication) may not enroll in SPA 402       |
| SPA     | 403         | Spanish Grammar and Stylistics for the Professions  | Students raise their level of awareness of appropriate grammatical, lexical and stylistic forms to use in their oral and written communication with U.S. Latino clients in formal (professional) and informal contexts in the community (e.g., schools, government agencies, social work settings, medical settings) or for reporting on issues of interest to the Hispanic community. Students enhance their analytical skills by analyzing and comparing Spanish oral and written discourse for genre-appropriate features (stylistics), grammaticality, mechanics, coherence and for a logical flow of ideas in public documents and oral discourses meant for a U.S. Latino audience.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Integrative Sciences & Arts  | College of Integrative Sciences and Arts         | 3     |                 | Pre-requisite: SPA 314 or 316; Students who have credit for SPA 494 (Span Gram & Stylistics for Pro) may not enroll in SPA 403      |
| SPA     | 404         | Spanish in U. S. Professional Communities           | Students investigate linguistic issues that impact the U.S. Latino community's interaction with professionals (e.g., interaction with service providers in schools, government agencies, social work settings, medical settings; language planning at state and local levels; Spanish spoken in different regions in the U.S.; Spanish language assessment of public sector employees; creation of Spanish for Professional Purposes courses). Students also learn to report on issues of interest to the Hispanic community.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Integrative Sciences & Arts  | College of Integrative Sciences and Arts         | 3     | C               | Pre-requisite: SPA 314 or 316; Students who have credit for SPA 494 (Spanish in the Community) may not enroll in SPA 404            |

| SPA     | 431         | Prose of Golden Age  | Focuses on a number of books of canonical prose of 16th- and 17th-century Spain. Spanish Golden Age prose is considered one of the most important bodies of literature both in the Spanish-speaking world and in early modern studies. An astonishing number of works of fiction and nonfiction were written in the period, inspiring artists and intellectuals all over Europe. All readings are representative of genres that, in addition to enjoying popularity in Spain, were extensively translated into other languages throughout Europe. Through a wide readership, Carcel de Amor, el Lazarillo, La Celestina, El Abencerraje, the Novelas ejemplares, and Desenganos amorosos, influenced the system of literary genres. They established a model for successful genres such as the sentimental novel, the picaresque and the Moorish novel, and promoted the reacceptance of the Italian novella in Spain. | N                 | LEC               | N               | OP6           | Liberal Arts and Sciences    | School of International Letters and Cultures     | 3     | L or HU         | Prerequisite(s): SPA 325   |

| SPE     | 499         | Individualized Instruction  | Provides an opportunity for original study or investigation in the major or field of specialization on an individual and more autonomous basis. Neither a substitute for a catalog course nor a means of taking a catalog course on an individual basis. Requires application well in advance of regular registration with the student's advisor, the advisor's signature, and approval by both the instructor with whom the student will work and the chair of the department offering the course.   | Y                 | LEC               | Y               | Z1            | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation               | 1-3   |                 | Prerequisite(s): admission to the Professional Program   |
| SPE     | 501         | Introduction to Research and Evaluation in Education  | Overview of educational inquiry from controlled, quantitative to qualitative, naturalistic. Emphasizes locating and critically interpreting published research.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student; Credit is allowed for only COE 501 or ECD 503 or PPE 501 or SPE 501 or TEL 501 |
| SPE     | 502         | Language Development and Communication Disorders  | Theory and practice in phonology, syntax, semantics and pragmatics of language development for children with and without disabilities from infancy through adolescence. Emphasizes multiple models of assessment and intervention across multiple ecologies.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student   |
| SPE     | 503         | Collaboration, Consultation and Family-Centered Practices   | Provides definitions, models, activities and exploration in the various roles in collaboration, consultation and teamwork in the field of special education. Explores connections in depth with families, professionals and support personnel across disciplines and agencies.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student; Credit is allowed for only SPE 503 or SPE 540 or SPE 541                       |
| SPE     | 504         | Elementary Methods in Content Areas   | Advanced level of development of knowledge and skills of instructional planning and methods of teaching and evaluating in elementary schools.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student; Credit is allowed for only EED 550 or SPE 504                                  |
| SPE     | 505         | Collaborating w/Families for Effective Transition Planning for Students w/Intensive Support Needs | Provides an introduction to transition planning for students with disabilities, focusing on person-centered planning and collaborative practices with families and service providers. Emphasizes understanding employment, self-determination, community participation, collaborative practices, family systems and person-centered planning. Introduces and applies a family systems perspective to understanding of families of all children, including infants and toddlers, adolescents and adults with disabilities. Emphasizes understanding diversity in values, belief and traditions.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student   |
| SPE     | 506         | Advanced Methods Assessment, Curriculum Planning and Instructional Strategies in Moderate/Severe  | Prepares teachers with the skills to effectively work with children and young adults with moderate to severe/profound disabilities (i.e., intensive support needs). Topics focus on assessment, curriculum planning and instructional strategies using evidence-based practices. Activities include direct observation and assessment techniques in inclusive environments; designing curriculum within multiple contexts with a focus on access to the general education in inclusive environments; selecting and implementing behavioral, communicative and instructional strategies; collaborative practices; and supporting across the educational lifespan of students. Students participate in class sessions two hours per week and engage in field experiences 6 to 8 hours per week in educational environments with students with intensive support needs. Emphasizes current research-based evidence to support students with intensive support needs. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student   |
| SPE     | 507         | Augmentative and Alternative Communication for Students with Intensive Support Needs              | Focuses on issues and strategies for teaching communication to individuals with intensive support needs (i.e., students with moderate to severe/profound disabilities such as intellectual disability, autism or multiple disabilities). This terminology is reflective of a support-based model of disability rather than a deficits-based model. Discusses specific assessment and intervention strategies as they relate to augmentative and alternative communication systems.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student   |
| SPE     | 508         | Educational Foundations of Serving Students with Severe Disabilities                              | Provides an overview of the etiological nature of individuals with moderate to severe disabilities (intellectual disabilities, multiple disabilities, sensory impairment and physical disabilities); characteristics of this population; and the associated support needs across the lifespan. Topics focus on the historical and legal contexts that influence services for this population; supports-based assessment and instruction; and key issues related to self-determination, person-centered planning in school contexts for children, youth and adults with moderate to severe disabilities.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student   |
| SPE     | 509         | Individualized Positive Behavior Supports for Students with Intensive Support Needs               | Knowledge and skills to assess, implement and evaluate positive behavior supports for students with intensive support needs (moderate to severe/profound intellectual disability, autism spectrum disorder, multiple disabilities), terminology reflective of a support-based model of disability rather than a deficits-based model. Students learn and apply the foundations of positive behavior supports, understanding the function of behavior and developing replacement behaviors, and implementing plans from a person-centered perspective that reflects the cultural needs of individuals and their families while drawing on interdisciplinary team members' expertise.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student   |
| SPE     | 510         | Assistive Technology Supports for Students with Intensive Support Needs                           | Focuses on specialized health care needs, policies and procedures for working with students with intensive support needs (i.e., students with moderate to severe/profound disabilities such as intellectual disability, autism or multiple disabilities). This terminology is reflective of a support-based model of disability rather than a deficits-based model. Provides an overview of methods for accommodating students including task or environmental modifications, assistive technology and adaptive equipment options.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student   |
| SPE     | 512         | Individuals with Intellectual Disability  | Etiology, diagnosis and management of individuals with intellectual disability. Current trends in prevention, programming and teacher preparation.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): graduate student (degree seeking or nondegree seeking). Credit is allowed for only SPE 312 or SPE 512                         |

| SPE     | 524         | Effective Classroom Behavior Management                              | Addresses behavioral management techniques for children with special needs, including the organization and delivery of instruction and functional behavioral analysis.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student  |
| SPE     | 531         | Methods of Applied Behavior Analysis for Exceptional Populations     | Methods based on the principles and concepts of applied behavior analysis. Students learn to operationally define problem behavior, conduct functional behavior assessment and generate recommendations for the development of behavior analytic interventions. Students gain knowledge and understanding of specific scientifically valid behavior change procedures. Discusses and applies their corresponding literature base.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student  |
| SPE     | 534         | Assessment and Evaluation for Children with Special Needs            | Norm-referenced and criterion-referenced assessment and evaluation of student learning to determine eligibility, plan individualized programs, and monitor progress of students with disabilities. Includes assessments in academic areas, language disorders and transition. Emphasizes integration and adaptation of curriculum, instruction and evaluation for all students.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student  |
| SPE     | 535         | Curricula, Methods, Technology, and Adaptations in Special Education | Develops strategies for effective adaptation of special education and general education curriculum through use of technology. Includes methods for addressing special needs in reading, math and language disorders.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student  |

| SPE     | 548         | Cross-Categorical Foundations: LD, ED, MR, & PI/OHI                  | Foundations course compares cognitive, motor, and affective developmental and educational issues across LD, ED, MR, and PI/OHI.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student  |
| SPE     | 555         | Inclusive Practices for Diverse Learners                             | Adapting instruction and assessment to meet the needs of all learners in inclusive settings. Includes the creation of plans to address challenging classroom behaviors.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student  |
| SPE     | 559         | Methods for Teaching Diverse Learners                                | Apprentice teachers select a specific population, based on placement (mild to moderate or moderate to severe), for individualized investigation. Utilizes practical strategies for curriculum development and IEP implementation. Gains a deeper understanding of their practice by analyzing and reflecting for the purposes of monitoring and adjusting instruction.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation               | 3     |                 | Pre-requisite: MEd Special Education (Teacher Certification) major  |
| SPE     | 561         | Characteristics/Diagnosis of Learning Disabilities                   | Theories related to learning disabilities, including identification and characteristics.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student  |
| SPE     | 565         | Behavior Change Systems  | Focuses on applied behavior analysis-based behavior change systems and procedures. Students learn to identify, implement, manage and supervise interventions based on fundamental elements of behavior change. Addresses behavior change considerations, including ethical use of behavior change systems and ongoing data collection for fidelity and progress monitoring.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): SPE 531; SPE 566; degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate  |
| SPE     | 566         | Applied Behavior Analysis in Inclusive Settings                      | Examines definitions, characteristics, assumptions and basic principles of applied behavior analysis. Describes and applies fundamental elements of behavior change, including reinforcement schedules, modeling, shaping, chaining and other behavior change procedures. Activities center on the design and delivery of social skill interventions with individuals with special needs in inclusive settings.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student  |
| SPE     | 567         | Ethics of Applied Behavior Analysis                                  | Addresses knowledge and application of the Behavior Analyst Certification Board Guidelines for Responsible Conduct for Behavior Analysts. Examines and resolves ethical dilemmas which may be encountered by behavior analysts. Addresses roles and responsibilities of members of a multidisciplinary treatment team comprised of educators, behavior analysts, parents, learners and other professionals. Students conduct risk-benefit analysis of evidence-based treatment approaches and develop declarations of professional practices and procedures for behavior analysts.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | OPT           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student  |
| SPE     | 568         | Behavior Assessment  | Focuses on critical aspects of applied behavior analysis, experimental design and the identification and implementation of effective assessment methodologies. Addresses client-centered responsibilities of the behavior analyst including problem identification, measurement, assessment, data collection and analysis. Students gain experience conducting functional behavior assessment and stimulus preference assessment to inform intervention design. Emphasizes measuring and ensuring treatment integrity.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): SPE 531; SPE 566; degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate. Focuses on evaluation of the effectiveness of interventions through use of behavior analytic technologies in clinical and applied settings. Students learn to interpret and describe behavior in behavior analytic terms and explain concepts and approaches in everyday language. Students research and evaluate skill assessment approaches through strategic review of the behavior analytic literature. Course addresses single-subject methodologies to inform design and delivery of effective instruction and clinical interventions. | Y                 | LEC               | Y               | OPT           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Educational Leadership & Innovation, Division | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): Graduate student (degree seeking or nondegree seeking); SPE 531; SPE 566; Credit is allowed for only SPE 569 or SPE 598 (Research Methods Applied Behavioral Analysis) |

| TAM     | 511         | Accounting for Business Leaders                                 | Focuses on external financial reporting to financial statement users outside the enterprise in both the United States and internationally. Topics include the history and role of financial accounting standards and financial statements in an economy, the preparation of financial accounting records and statements, and the financial accounting standards that govern the measurement of the underlying financial activity in an enterprise. Our study of the methods and measures mandated in financial accounting standards includes both U.S. Generally Accepted Accounting Principles (GAAP) and International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRS). Also covers an analysis of costs and cost behavior, which naturally leads to our being able to estimate future costs of products or activities, and then to cost planning at different levels of activity and cost inputs. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student        |
| TAM     | 521         | Financial Analysis and Management                               | Covers fundamental theories and practices of modern financial management within a market-oriented framework. Develops analytical skills for sound decision making and management. Emphasizes practical applications and equips learners with tools necessary for making investment and financing decisions and corporate valuation. Learning is achieved via problem solving, lectures, case analysis and discussions.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student        |
| TAM     | 530         | Data Analysis and Decision Making                               | Covers concepts, techniques and applications of commonly applied quantitative tools to large data sets that are now ubiquitous in everyday business. Understands and applies statistical techniques in order to improve the quality of managerial decisions. Starts with elementary statistics (measures of dispersion, location, random variables) and moves on to cover frequently used managerial models (Regression, ANOVA). Emphasizes the application of these techniques in a wide variety of data sets across industries--to that extent students use Excel (still the language of office math) and SPSS (more advanced software) to help pick the needles in the haystack. Once mere data is transformed into information, students evaluate its adequacy and glean insights for decision making.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student        |

Topics include project management, value-chain structures, supplier partnerships, logistics, risk management and value-stream mapping. Emphasizes the development, process and tools required to create a business or acquire a business in an emerging market. Builds a business plan utilizing the business model canvass as well as the startup map. Also dives into term sheets, letters of intent.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student        |
| TAM     | 534         | Entrepreneurship and Business Plan Development                  | Focuses on choices that have an impact on the performance of the entire organization or business start up. Includes the problems faced by, and the decisions made by, executive leaders who have to balance the needs and expectations of stakeholders including customers, shareholders and employees with the requirements of local country practices and government regulations. Analyzes problems and decisions from the point of view of the founder, general manager or chief executive who has responsibility for the welfare of the entire organization. By focusing on policy decisions, concerns the choice of goals as well as the organization; management and deployment of scarce resources to pursue these goals within the context of an imperfect, changing and competitive world.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): TAM 511; TAM 541; TGM 505; TGM 540; TGM 551; TGM 579 |
| TAM     | 541         | Strategy in a Competitive World                                 | Personal leadership development is optimized by grounded reflection, self knowledge and continuous learning as we interact with others. Therefore, the personal development part of this course cultivates introspective and skill-building competencies that include conceptual grounding that is based in an experiential learning focus. Discusses self- and other-awareness and engages in group/team interaction, as well as conducts individual self-assessments and individual feedback. In addition to developing ourselves at the personal level, developing ourselves as leaders at the organizational level is imperative to sustainability of the company.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student        |

| TEL     | 431         | Learning in Workplaces   | School isn't the only place where people learn! Once you get a job, most of what you learn will occur as you do your job, and that kind of learning is crucial to the development of competence and expertise. Surprisingly, seventy to eighty percent of this important learning takes place outside of formal training. Studying learning in workplaces illuminates how learning happens universally, and helps teachers and trainers design effective educational programs.                      | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | MaryLouFulton Teachers College | Division of Teacher Preparation               | 3     |                 | Pre-requisite: Minimum 45 hours; Credit is allowed for only TEL 431 or 494 (Learning in Workplaces)  |

| TGM     | 200         | Principles of Accounting for Global Organizations | Focuses on financial and managerial accounting and examines how outsiders evaluate businesses, nonprofits and governmental operations and how economic events are reflected in a firm's financial statements, including balance sheets and cash flow statements. Examines key accounting methods that impact a company's financial statements and how they are used by shareholders, creditors, employees and customers to make credit decisions and/or value a firm's equity securities.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): Thunderbird School of Global Management undergraduate student   |
| TGM     | 204         | Principles of Marketing for Global Organizations  | Explores the ways in which global marketing strategies reflect a deep understanding of markets and create valuable offerings for customers globally. Broadly speaking, marketing strategy making is comprised of segmentation, targeting and positioning. Segmentation is the process by which we segregate a relatively heterogeneous mass market into relatively homogeneous market segments. Targeting is the process by which we analyze opportunities and identify those customers where our business has the greatest prospects for success. Positioning is the process of assembling the "total offering" (product, service, distribution and price) and communicating the benefits of this "total offering" to the members of our target market. Challenges students to think critically about global competition. As such, rote learning of terms and concepts is not sufficient to prepare students to manage a business in global markets. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): Thunderbird School of Global Management undergraduate student   |

| TGM     | 501         | Global Accounting                                     | Focuses on two aspects of accounting: financial and managerial accounting. Financial accounting is about how outsiders view and evaluate an organization such as a business, a not-for-profit entity or a governmental operation. It focuses on how economic events are reflected in a firm's financial statements including a balance sheet, an income statement and a statement of cash flows. It also focuses on how financial statement information is used by various stakeholders such as shareholders, creditors, employees and customers in making decisions with regard to the firm, including credit decisions and/or valuing a firm's equity securities. Analysis and equity management accounting involves providing information, both financial and non-financial, to management and employees to aid in planning, organizing activities, and monitoring and controlling business performance. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): graduate Thunderbird School of Global Management student          |

A key focus is developing competitive advantage by creating customer value. Course participants gain a fundamental understanding of marketing strategy and marketing analysis (i.e., customer, competitor and company analysis) as well as an appreciation of the basic strategic issues involved in market segmentation, market targeting and market positioning in the international arena. Also examines the major tactics/tools used by global marketers to facilitate the management of their international marketing plans (i.e., product development, pricing strategies, marketing communications, distribution management). Emphasizes developing skills for entering new markets and sustaining or growing current markets.                           | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): graduate Thunderbird School of Global Management student          |

Topics include issues and techniques in multinational funds transfers; identifying and measuring foreign exchange and interest rate risk; multinational tax planning; managing foreign exchange and interest rate risk; hedging instruments, including forward contracts, options and swaps; and financially engineered synthetics. Students also manage the financial functions of a computer-simulated multinational corporation, construct a biennial report summarizing their management results and present oral reports to a board of directors consisting of professors and invited business professionals. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): TGM 502 or 552  |
| TGM     | 530         | Big Data in the Age of the Global Economy                          | Creating a sustainable IT-dependent competitive advantage is a major goal for forward-thinking multinational organizations. Understands how multinational organizations make strategic use of Big Data to gain a competitive advantage in the global economy. Covers the important technological aspects of big data from a managerial viewpoint. Delves into the understanding of global data and how this data must be standardized to account for differences in collection methods, legal constraints and cultural interpretation to create a reliable platform for evaluation.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 1-3   |                 | Prerequisite(s): graduate Thunderbird School of Global Management student                          |
| TGM     | 531         | Multinational Value Chain  | Exposes students to the strategies and challenges associated with moving goods, services, information and associated payments across complex, globally dispersed value chains to end customers. Topics include value-chain structures, supplier partnerships, cross-cultural issues, technology, data networks, global logistics, risk management and value-chain mapping. A field project provides students with an opportunity to work in teams applying the course concepts to increase customer value in a real value chain.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 1-3   |                 | Prerequisite(s): graduate Thunderbird School of Global Management student                          |
| TGM     | 532         | Leading Global Projects  | Provides an overview of the global context of project leadership. Global project leaders work at the intersection of project management, leadership in a project context and cross-cultural effectiveness. Exposes students to key project leadership approaches including stakeholder management, methods for increasing inclusion on global project teams and building high-performing global project teams. Uses case studies, a simulation, several exercises and interactive discussions.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 1-3   |                 | Prerequisite(s): graduate Thunderbird School of Global Management student                          |

| TGM     | 546         | Regional Industrial Analysis                              | Builds on concepts introduced in competitive strategy, global strategy and regional business environment. Focuses on the analysis of the strategies adopted by competing players and their impact on the global strategies pursued by the parent organization in the context of regional industry dynamics. Covers a spectrum of topics ranging from industry cluster formation, country-specific advantage, industry versus industry ecosystem analysis, the government's role in industry and regional development including national innovation systems, demand and supply chains in regions, and emerging market challengers. Applies multiple decision-making tools and frameworks to understand the Information and Communications Technology (ICT) industry in Asia Pacific--the fastest growing region in the world. Tools and frameworks learned in this course are applicable to other regions and other industries. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 2-3   |                 | Prerequisite(s): TGM 540 and 541 OR TGM 504   |
| TGM     | 547         | Leading Change and Transformation in a Global Environment | Increases understanding of the nature of organizational change (through conceptual frameworks, readings and discussions). Specifies skills needed for managing change. Enhances sensitivity to the contribution and consequences of the human element as related to change. Helps student's own capacity to "thrive on change."  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 1-3   |                 | Prerequisite(s): graduate Thunderbird School of Global Management student; TGM 540        |
| TGM     | 548         | Global Strategy   | Focuses on how global firms create value. Covers topics ranging from country-specific competitive advantage and the notion of distance to alternative global strategy archetypes and sources of competitive advantage for emerging market multinationals. The approach applies multiple decision-making tools and frameworks to untangle the complexities of managing in a global corporation.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 1-3   |                 | Prerequisite(s): TGM 504 OR TGM 540 and 541   |
| TGM     | 549         | Global Leadership   | Explores the concept of effective leadership within and across a variety of organizations and global contexts. Definitions of "leadership" and strategies for becoming an accomplished leader abound. Rather than attempt to narrowly focus our attention on definitions, leadership styles, and supposedly "definitive" theories of leadership, focuses on the demands of and competencies associated with excellent leadership. Most importantly, examines how leaders sense the need for and then manage organizational change. Given the increasingly complex world we live in and the ongoing and rapid rate of change, change management has become one of the most critical of leadership skills.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 1-3   |                 | Prerequisite(s): graduate Thunderbird School of Global Management student; TGM 504 or 540 |
| TGM     | 551         | Global Marketing Strategy                                 | Covers the major concepts involved in creating and sustaining customer value, analyzing the firm's macro environment, choosing whether or not to enter a foreign market, how to evaluate different foreign markets, the best methods for entering different markets, the market research design process, understanding consumer and B2B customer behavior, and ethical issues encountered in global marketing.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 2     |                 | Prerequisite(s): graduate Thunderbird School of Global Management student                 |
| TGM     | 552         | Global Marketing Management                               | Covers the functional aspects of marketing including decisions relating to segmentation, targeting, branding, product development, pricing, distribution and advertising/promotion. Students integrate their knowledge of these topics through the creation of an international marketing plan based on a product or service and in a country approved by the instructor.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 2     |                 | Prerequisite(s): graduate Thunderbird School of Global Management student                 |
| TGM     | 553         | Global Customer Decision Making                           | Both theoretical and applied, the backbone and foundation of the course draws heavily from behavioral economics, consumer psychology and consumer information processing. Equips students with a comprehensive understanding of how and why consumers make decisions the way they do in the market (B2C). Although consumers desire to make rational decisions that maximize their utility, in reality, more often than not, they tend to make irrational and suboptimal choices. Offers why such phenomena occur and how consumers can improve their quality of decision making. Offers a richer appreciation of the heuristics and decision-making rules that consumers use and biases that affect consumer decision making.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): TGM 503 OR TGM 551 and 552   |
| TGM     | 554         | Global Marketing Research                                 | Focuses on the use of marketing research techniques for competitive advantage in a global business context. Develops the necessary skills to plan a research project, collect data, analyze the data and report findings.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): TGM 503 OR TGM 551 and 552   |
| TGM     | 555         | Global Product Development and Pricing                    | Combines global product development (GPD) and global pricing (GP). GPD examines how an organization can identify, develop and manage products for global markets. Pays special attention to issues such as the product development cycle, innovation charter, barriers to product development and effectively organizing for product development. GP provides in-depth knowledge of the field of global pricing, covering the psychology, economics and tactics of pricing for a business enterprise, product or service. Better pricing knowledge usually converts to better bottom-line results. Students learn pricing theory and tactics as well as develop hands-on pricing skills, all aimed at improving profitability. These skills can be applied across the full range of professional contexts--as entrepreneurs, brand managers, business unit managers, management and M&A consultants.                           | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): TGM 503 OR TGM 551 and 552   |
| TGM     | 556         | Global Strategic Services Marketing                       | Services have come to dominate our economy. Yet there remains a naive belief that service production, marketing and management is a simple adaptation of goods production, marketing and management. Unlike physical goods, services are co-produced with customers at a time, and in a place, of the customer's choosing. This co-production directly involves an organization's front-line employees. As a result, it is more difficult for services to be inventoried and checked for quality assurance. Provides a thorough understanding of the management and continuous improvement of service operations, including a thorough understanding of the role of customers in service operations such that service firms can design effective service experience so as to minimize service failure.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): TGM 503 OR TGM 551 and 552   |

| TGM     | 558         | Global Data Analysis for Strategic Marketing | Provides an understanding of the key marketing issues through an examination of various marketing decisions. Course complements other marketing courses by adopting a more hands-on and practical approach to strategic market planning. A combination of lectures and discussions, analyses of cases, software demonstrations, and a simulation game facilitate understanding of the material. Requires a solid understanding of marketing planning, statistics and quantitative methods.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): TGM 503 OR TGM 551 and TGM 552                                    |
| TGM     | 559         | Global Brand Management                      | Provides a managerial orientation to the topic of global brand management. Prepares participants for a career either in the role of the "traditional brand manager" or in the role of a "manager with brand-related responsibilities." A major portion of the course is working on a global brand field project to develop a brand management/marketing plan for a brand and brand challenge of student (and team) choosing. Emphasizes the ethical dimension of global brand management; focuses on an individual brand ethics project.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): TGM 503 or 552  |
| TGM     | 572         | Global Import Export Management              | Requires understanding theoretic, strategic, finance and practical business principles complicated by the differences in business practices, culture, laws and currency regulations of multiple countries and regions. Focuses on important pragmatic aspects of selling and acquiring goods and services to and from trading partners in foreign markets. Today's global marketplace, while dynamic with opportunity, contains rapidly changing physical, fiscal, technological and regulatory considerations for those who manage such activities. Important concepts to be learned include establishing strategic direction, identifying and managing a multitude of risks, protecting company assets, lowering the cost of finance, building winning business relationships and profitably expanding business into new markets. | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student                     |
| TGM     | 573         | Country Risk Management                      | Global managers must be concerned with potential risks to their businesses posed by political, social and financial forces at work globally and in specific regions and countries. This course centers around state-of-the-art assessment models used by businesses and foreign investors. Issues include methods of measuring and forecasting risk and mitigating risk. Recommended for students interested in business risk forecasting as a function in and of itself, and in operations, marketing, and any arena in which business investors must be able to anticipate and manage risks.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student                     |
| TGM     | 575         | Global Affairs Theory                        | Examines major theories and concepts in global affairs including different schools of international relations thought and levels-of-analysis determinants of foreign policy. These theories and concepts provide key insights on contemporary global affairs issues, and are applied to real-world events and case studies. Covers the role of political economy in the separate course on states and markets in the global political economy.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student                     |
| TGM     | 576         | Global Affairs Methods                       | Covers research methodologies and analytical techniques used to analyze global issues. Topics include research design, quantitative methods, qualitative methods, policy analysis and database resources. These tools are used in government, intergovernmental organizations and nongovernmental organizations, and they are applied to key issues in global affairs such as democratization and human rights, income inequality and development and political violence and international security.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): TGM 575   |
| TGM     | 577         | International Organizations                  | Examines the role of international organizations in global affairs particularly in the areas of international peace, security, humanitarian and environmental issues. Focuses on intergovernmental organizations such as the United Nations and International Criminal Court as well as regional organizations such as the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the African Union. Also focuses on international nongovernmental organizations such as Amnesty International and International Red Cross. Examines the impact of as well as the constraints on international organizations in real-world events and case studies. Covers major economic intergovernmental organizations in the separate course on states and markets in the global political economy.   | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3     |                 | Prerequisite(s): TGM 575   |
| TGM     | 579         | Communicating in a Global Context            | In a dynamic and interactive format, presents a framework of models and skills for building communication performance in competitive global business settings. Assists in implementing strategies for mastering interpersonal encounters, including conflict resolution, in multicultural environments. Not only examines theories of communication, but places students in experiential situations in which they develop valuable global management skills. Using cases, self-assessment questionnaires, multicultural team exercises and simulations, equips the global manager with the ability to solve problems and take advantage of opportunities in a multicultural world.  | N                 | LEC               | N               | GNA           | Thunderbird Sch of Global Mgmt | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 1-2   |                 | Prerequisite(s): graduate Thunderbird School of Global Management student          |
