COM	464	Communicative Sexualities	Grounded in the discipline of communicology, provides an introduction to the qualitative research practice of semiotic phenomenology. Examines sexuality as a personal, social, historical, and cultural phenomenon, wherein communication is studied as the mediating force through which meanings are ascribed to sexuality and sexual experience. Sexuality is studied as it manifests among a wide variety of people, practices, and contexts. U.S. American culture provides the primary cultural context. Addresses basic questions including: How do we understand sexuality? How have we come to know what we know about sexuality? How do we understand the relationship between sexuality as personal desire, and sexuality as social norm in specific cultural contexts. EMS	513	Communications and Sustainability III	Most stories of sustainability are driven and told with data as its central character. Unfortunately, data is nearly meaningless to our minds unless it is placed in an illuminating human context. The best chief sustainable storytellers bring meaning to data through the use of metaphor brought to life by thought-provoking narrative. Story grips the mind and propels people forward. Students develop proof of concepts for campaigns, expand social media presence and influence, create and record a 20-minute presentation in the style of a TedTALK, and become a leader in sustainable communications. HST	404	Conquest	How did Hernan Cortés and Francisco Pizarro defeat the Aztec and Inca Empires? Despite numeric inferiority, limited provisions, and little knowledge about the Americas, Cortés and Pizarro defeated advanced civilizations that had experienced warriors and millions of inhabitants. Possible explanations include the conquistador's valor, advanced weaponry, superior military strategy, Indian allies, and biological attacks. In their encounters with native peoples of the Americas, Europeans were not always conquerors. Álvaro Núñez Cabeza de Vaca and Lope de Aguirre failed both in their attempt to conquer a large Indian civilization and in their effort to find mineral wealth. A few Europeans such as Bartolomé de Las Casas spoke out against the abuses committed against the Indians during the conquest. Explores these issues from the perspective of both Europeans and native peoples and looks at the long-term impact for Latin America and its peoples.
