

ASU TEMPE CAMPUS BUILDINGS SURVEY, 1960-2007

This document provides overview information on major Tempe campus buildings constructed between 1960-2007.

Building data is arranged alphabetically by the current building name. The survey provides data points on each building including: Current and historic building names, a photograph, date of construction or dedication, architect, contractor, street address, construction cost and references. Athletic practice facilities, warehouses, annexes and minor remodeling projects are not represented in this survey.

This survey was compiled by Michael B. Olive as part of his thesis project for the Barrett Honors College in the spring, summer and fall of 2007. Thesis readers were Ron McCoy, University Architect, Rob Spindler, University Archivist and Arelyn Simon, Associate Professor, School of Human Evolution and Social Change. Michael's honors thesis is also available from University Archives.

Researchers interested in buildings built prior to 1960 should consult similar survey data available in:

Thomas, Alfred, Arizona State University: Documentary History of the First Seventy-Five Years, Vol.4, Part X, 1960.

Language and Literature Building

1. Language and Literature Building
 - a. Building Name (original and re-naming): Original- Language and Literature Building. Approved to be renamed G. Homer Durham Language and Literature Building in 1994 as approved by the Arizona Board of Regents and dedicated on Dec. 6th 1994. Durham was president of the university from 1960-1969 which was just after Arizona State officially became a University. Enrollment increased by 10K students, over 30 structures were built, and the Colleges of Fine Arts and Nursing were created. Additionally, he developed an early registration program and gained professional accreditation to the colleges of Nursing, Engineering, and Architecture. (ASU Insight, November 4, 1994 by George Cathcart, page 2.) He was the university's 10th president, and according to a later article, 50 building projects were completed, to include the Language and Lit building. (State Press January 17th 1995 by Dawn DeChristina. Page 5.)
 - b. Date Constructed (Opened or dedicated)- Constructed in 1964 (or, building says 1963), Opened in 1965 on site of original Auditorium that was built in 1909 and razed in 1956.
 - c. Address: 851 S. CADY MALL
 - d. Date Razed: N/A
 - e. Architect and Influence- Original: J.Lakin and Additions: Kemper Goodwin (University Records Collection MSS-98 Box 100, Folder 10/OV Department of Facilities Management and Planning 100 year Management File. May 10, 1984.)
 - f. General Contractor- R.E. McKee

- g. Construction Cost- Original Construction Approx 1.1 Million
- h. Square Feet- 67,347- 6 stories + 1 Basement According to University Records Collection MSS-98 Box 100, Folder 10/OV Department of Facilities Management and Planning 100 year Management File. May 10, 1984, the original wing (B) had 52,920, 2nd addition (A) has 24,948, and 3rd (C) 51,975. Gross Sq Feet- 121,1432 according to Office of President Nelson ACC #1992-00555 Box 7 Folder 19 Buildings 1300.
- i. Descriptions of any major remodels 1) Talks to expand building began as early as 1967, but construction starts in 1970, Architect- David Sholder of Tempe, Contractor-Donovan Construction Company, 54,085 square feet according to University Archives Index UPC 280.1.54-62 but 55, 420 according to UE ASU Info 1087- University Archives Index. Completed in 1972 at cost of $1,442,300 from US office of Education and the Arizona State Commission for Higher Education. Expands 5 story building northward, additional 2 stories to the south wing, and entrance modified. 2) May 1970- Remodeling of Speech and Hearing Clinic completed, costing $59,744 dollars. Architect- James Lakin of Tempe, Contractor- Robert Hickman of Phoenix. 3) Completed May 1980- Elevators and subsequent systems replaced and expanded, Cost $89,654 (Photographs and architectural documents from UPC 280.1.54-62- University Archives Index and most importantly UE ASU INFO 1087- University Archives Biography File. This document provided info on architects, contractors, expansion details, dates, and expenditures) Addition of 1972 added 54,085 gross square feet. (University Records Collection MSS-98 Box 100, Folder 10/OV Arizona State University Building List Property Control Department May 22, 1972.) It was proposed in the 80's that the building be renovated and enhanced, especially in the matters of the Speech and Hearing Clinic, due to the high volume of participants and the fact that the clinic is one of the university's closest direct link to the community. (Nelson ACC #90-441 Box 2 of 15. Folder 3 of Box 2. 123 Business Affairs Bonding 1987.)
- j. Purpose (this will likely change over time and there are lots of mixed use buildings out there, we may want to establish some generalized categories like classroom, administration, research, specialized e.g. library, Ron may know of an ASU standard for this...) Always been used as classroom, lab, and office space for departments of English and Languages and Literature. (UE ASU INFO 1087- University Archives Biography File) At one point between 1968 and 1979, the L&L building housed the School of Geographical Sciences. (<http://geography.asu.edu/hist/index.php>) See building "walk through".
- k. Events & Extras- "First high rise classroom building on campus." (UE ASU INFO 1087 University Archives, Department of Archives and Special Collections, University Libraries. ASU, Tempe AZ.) The L&L building stands on the site of the university's first auditorium and gymnasium; the building built in 1909 to compliment Old Main and the Science Building, effectively creating the university's first quadrangle.

The Architect of the auditorium was Thornton Fitzhugh, the contractor was Clinton Campbell, and the cost to build was $27,408.24. (J.O. Grimes Papers 1897-1952 UM USM-211 Men's Gym and Training Quarters. Hayden Archives Ephemera) The 850 seat auditorium and gymnasium was razed by the then Arizona State College President Dr. Grady Gammage in 1955 after a history of condemnations, repairs, and bat infestation. Although it was a beautiful building, it was more of a hazard than good, and the university was growing at such a rate that it could no longer serve the needs of the university. ("Auditorium" UE INFO-250 Hayden Archives Ephemera and "Auditorium Demolition 1955" UE INFO-251 Hayden Archives Ephemera) Building is built on original 20 acres sold to the University by George Wilson (whom Wilson Hall is named for) in a selfless act to help support the initiative of bringing a teacher's school to Tempe. This was to become the Tempe Normal School.

Durham Language and Literature Building Walkthrough

1. Western Entrance Breezeway: Three plaques adorn the breezeway, commemorating the original building, the 1970 addition, and 1994 dedication to G. Homer Durham. The plaque contains the following information: Year of building, architect, contractor, President of the university at the time (Durham), and a list of the board of regents of the time. For the 1963 plaque, the Board consisted of the following people: Paul J. Fannin as Governor, Elwood W. Bradford as President, as well as O.D. Miller, George Chambers, John Babbitt, Arthur B. Schellenberg, Vivian L. Boysen, Leon Levy, W.P. Goss, and W.W. Dick. On the 1970 Building Addition, the following are listed: Jack Williams as Governor, W.P. Goss as President, and Kenneth G. Bentson, Elwood W. Bradford, Norman G. Sharber, James Elliot Dunseath, Gordon D. Paris, W.P. Shofstall, Margaret M. Christy, and Paul L. Singer. The dedication to Durham, there is the quote, "During his tenure as our tenth president, 1960 – 1969, G. Homer Durham oversaw the establishment of six colleges and the completion of 30 campus buildings; students and faculty doubled in number and the first P.H.D was awarded."
2. Original Basement: Seems to be shared with North wing, Contains mediated and non-mediated classrooms and offices.
3. Original 1st Floor: Although the 1970 modifications to the original building make it difficult to discern what the original portion of the building was, for the purpose of this walkthrough, it was the East and West hallways of the middle section of the building as a whole. The first floor maintains the main (west) entrance to the building, an open area connecting the north, south, and east hallways of the building, as well as some display cases for various displays. The east hallway contains non-mediated classrooms.
4. Original 2nd Floor: This floor contains classrooms and one office.
5. Original 3rd Floor: This floor contains the Writing Center, TA (graduate student) offices, and the Faculty and Graduate Student Resource Center. (Contains computers, scanners, etc.)
6. Original 4th Floor: Department of Language and Literature, various offices.

7. Original 5th Floor: Department of English, Undergraduate Advising, and various offices.
8. Original 6th Floor: Film and Media Studies office, Undergraduate Advising, various offices, Russian and East European Studies Consortium (Plaque that says, “This student library in Slavic studies has been endowed by donations from the William Ambrazevich and the families of Ed Bergman and Mary Choncoff” (Check spelling of names), Romanian and Central European Culture Collaborative Office. The latter two features may have moved to Coor Hall.
9. South Wing Basement: Language Audio/Video Lab, mediated classroom, offices, Tape/Equipment Distribution, and the Language Computing Lab.
10. South Wing 1st Floor: Spanish Writing Center, Emeritus Faculty Offices, Department of Speech and Hearing Science, Speech and Hearing Clinic, English Department undergraduate lounge, and classroom.
11. South Wing 2nd Floor: Classrooms
12. North Wing Basement: See Original Basement.
13. North Wing 1st Floor: Classrooms
14. North Wing 2nd Floor: English Education Office, Renaissance Women Office, Antislavery Literature Project Office, Student Teaching Office, Classrooms.
15. North Wing 3rd Floor: Stretch Writing Program Office, TA Offices, Graduate Student Lounge, Writing Programs Office, Faculty Reading Room.
16. North Wing 4th Floor: Offices, Faculty Reading Room, Faculty Work Room. (Contains fridge, copier, printer, sink, microwave, etc.)

Write Up

The 1960's were an unprecedented time of growth for Arizona State University. Two years after the former Arizona State College (ASC) had become a University under the leadership of Dr. Grady Gammage, G. Homer Durham ascended to the presidency and quickly “saw that ASU must break out of its national affiliation with the nation’s Teacher’s Colleges as its major national identification and association, and move toward the State Universities Association (SUA) and the National Association of State Universities (NASU).” (Durham) In other words, now that the institution was a university, it needed to look and act like one. This attitude led to the conversion of the city streets that transversed the campus into malls, as well as the construction of modern structures built to suit the needs of a growing university.

The Durham Language and Literature Building, the University’s first high rise classroom, is located west of Old Main on the original 20 acre plot of land that was sold to the university by George Wilson in a selfless act to help support the initiative of bringing a teacher’s school to Tempe. It resides on the location of the university’s first auditorium/gymnasium that was raised in 1955. It is flanked on the west by Cady Mall, which was formerly a portion of College Avenue. As stated earlier, this first high rise classroom of the University and subsequent mall conversions were the first architectural signs of the transformation of the institution into a real University. This did not come without controversy. Soon after the construction of the original building, it was decided that expansions were in order. It wasn’t, however, until 1970 that construction would begin due to lack of financial support. But this wasn’t the only problem. Students were concerned because the north wing would destroy a section of the original Old Main park where students enjoyed relaxation and study. The park was also the home of several trees that were associated with the early years of the university. Some of these were transplanted while others were lost. In the end, as can be assumed, the administration built the expansion anyway, citing the needs of the University. The university also underwent and elevator upgrade that was completed in 1980.

The LL building, as it is referred to today, is the home of the English Department, Department of Language and Literature, Department of Speech and Hearing Science, as well as Film and Media studies. The building contains a host of offices and classrooms whose numbering system can be described as nothing short of confusing. It appears that the expansions have blurred the lines of the wings and original building, and almost every stairwell or elevator may only grant access to certain parts of the building, depending where you are in the building. Couple this with the various inlets contained on several floors and personal orientation and navigation can sometimes be difficult. Moreover, the hallways are relatively narrow given the amount of traffic the building sees throughout the semester of undergraduates and graduates melding together in a multi-lingual conglomerate. Given the English and Foreign language requirements of many majors, almost every student will have a class at one point or another during their time at the university; especially during their freshman and sophomore years. While there, they will enjoy many parallels of a large metropolis: Periods of high traffic and congestion, multicultural experience, and shared communal stress and frustration; all while maintaining their identity as a student just trying to get that degree.
