He's got a point. Just lately I, too, find myself preferring the company of Donizetti over that of some sweaty, inert thug.

Sort of.

When we recently monopolized an entire issue of Phoenix Resource with a spoof of gossip, the response from readers was excessive. Telephone calls and letters alternately congratulated our impudence or banished us to fag rag hell. Ultimately, our message miscarriedwhile we endeavored to portray gossip as silly and destructive, some of you were insulted while others clamored for more. Either way, everyone had the same question: would we do this again?

Yes. Beginning with this issue, we will devote a page of this publication to the most mindless, least constructive mass of filth you will ever consume. This steaming lump of crap will appear on page 12 of each issue, and you will read every syllable of it. We defy you to look away.

We have scoured the queer underbelly of the city and unearthed the most insufferable crackpot Phoenix has ever harbored. and he is going to expose every depraved detail of each of your lives. He will worm his way into your gatherings, disrupt your cocktail hours, plunder your private affairs. Soon, you will live for his column, terrified that he has uncovered your sleaziest dalliances. Phoenix activists reassess their fortunes after losing Linda hile the returns came in during the evening of Oct. 1, a few stunned observers began asking questions. Did Linda try hard enough? Did Linda receive enough help from the gay community? How could this happen? By a dishearteningly large margin, Linda Nadolski lost her bid for re-election to the

"6" Down, Two to Go

by Don Slutes

and a second of all years a finish

Phoenix City Council. Nadolski, who represents Dist. 6 in eastcentral Phoenix, had been one of our community's biggest supporters on the council.

The pundits say several factors conspired to reduce the voter turnout in this election, and thus its predictability. These included the fact that Phoenicians had no mayoral race to grab their attention (incumbent Paul Johnson was unopposed), and the fact that this was only the most recent (and possibly least publicized) of a long string of off-year elections. Some Phoenicians, in fact, had just been to the polls one week earlier to choose a U.S. Representative in Congressional District 2.

Linda Nadolski wasn't the only loser. Community activists had high hopes for Nadolski associate Barbara Wyllie, who was running for the council seat in west Phoenix's Dist. 5, against conservative incumbent John Nelson. Wyllie, the victim of a last-minute smear campaign engineered by a Nelson supporter, lost by a sizable margin. Meanwhile, another community favorite, incumbent Craig Tribken in Dist. 4 (midtown Phoenix), failed to avoid a November runoff by barely one percent in a threeway contest. Tribken, at least, is still in the running.

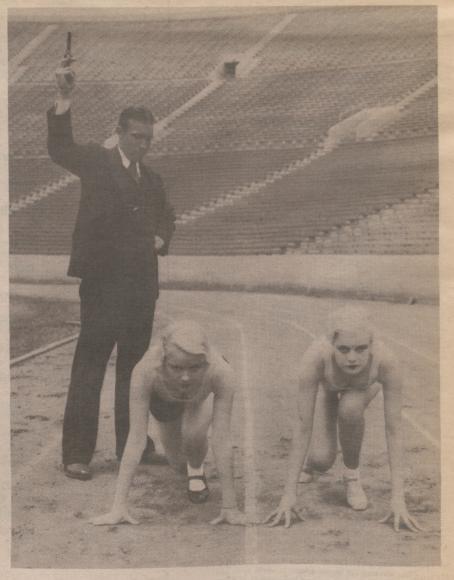

What do these results mean for the Phoenix City Council, which has previously been thought to be fairly hospitable to our community's needs? Despite the loss of their beloved Nadolski, a few activists are sanguine. The council is still far from being a conservative body, they point out. Two other friends on the council, Mary Rose Wilcox and Thelda Williams, won re-election handily, while nominal friends Calvin Goode (whose district encompasses downtown and the Coronado neighborhood) and Skip Rimsza also retained their Still, interested members of Phoenix's gay community will be watching-and no doubt participating in—the runoff campaign. Not only Tribken's but also the Dist. 2 seat will be contested in November. In the latter district, the communityendorsed candidate, Dan Carroll, finished with a plurality of votes in the five-way primary election, but was far short of the required majority. With the eventual election of both Tribken and Carroll, perhaps the loss of Nadolski would be easier to take.

COMING IN FROM THE COLD

According to The Nation magazine, Amnesty International has finally changed its tune about worldwide victims of lesbian/gay-based intolerance.

A year and a half ago, I passed along some information gleaned from an earlier Nation article concerning Amnesty International's virtual abandonment of lesbian/gay prisoners of conscience. AI had a problem with equating sexual freedom with political freedom because to do so might alienate some otherwise friendly countries (and contributors) who don't believe that imprisoning homosexuals is such a bad idea. The original article, by Darrell Yates Rist, cofounder of the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation, quoted Curt Goering, the deputy directory of Amnesty International USA, as asking, somewhat rhetorically, "To what extent is this issue grounded in international norms?

While AI said it would defend the "legitimate" free speech rights of activists imprisoned for pro-gay-rights views, it was the group's policy to look the other way when men and women who merely practice or even aspire to practice homosexuality were rounded up and imprisoned. (It did claim to insist, however, that such incarceration be "humane") incarceration be "humane.")

I made some hay of the issue in a Phoenix Resource article in April of 1990, suggesting that lesbians and gay men in Arizona might take this somewhat spineless policy into account before writing checks to Amnesty International. Because it has now been reported that AI is taking the next step to defend the human rights of lesbians and gay men, I feel obligated to report the change.

It will be interesting to follow the activities of AI following this innovation. Will once-supportive countries with religion-based or other traditional anti-gay leanings continue to support AI? Is AI really willing to turn on countries, which, while tolerant of political dissent, continue to punish homosexuals?

I receive dunning letters from Amnesty International on an almost monthly basis (despite never having contributed). I may start to read them for these developments. Because, until they have documented some results of this policy change, AI still has a long way to go to earn its reputation as the world's foremost human rights organization.

Arch-conservative columnist and commentator Pat Buchanan is probably a racist and a jewhater. But these animosities pale in comparison to his hatred of homosexuals. He is the Jesse Helms of political pundits. I would venture to guess that at least 10 percent of his twice- or thrice-weekly newspaper columns attack some aspect of the lesbian/gay political agenda. (Then again, I guess one in ten is only fair.)

In this regard, he has loudly supported every draconian and reactionary AIDS policy proposal that has come down the pike. His recurring theme, which is repeated by plenty of others in and out of government, goes something like this: the "homosexual lobby" screams loudly for more funds for AIDS research, while continually thwarting any realistic effort to combat the disease, like mandatory testing. It's a compelling paradox for those unfamiliar with the subject. And Buchanan, who is either an idiot or a demagogue, leaps upon the seeming contradiction with zeal, pointing it out at every opportunity. In fact, many conservatives now take it as gospel that the gay lobby is huge and powerful and has successfully frightened off Congress from doing anything to deal honestly with this

Of course, the "gay lobby" isn't quite as monolithic as we've been told; in fact, it's always in danger of splintering. But it's true that these two items are at the core of its AIDS agenda: demanding more money for AIDS research (which will ultimately benefit all types of medical research); and fighting punitive laws that would strip people of their rights—opposing mandatory testing, urging absolute assurances of confidentiality, and fighting discrimination against AIDS patients and HIV-positives.

If AIDS activists are obsessive about their agenda, it's because of their experience with the early phases of the disease. It wasn't so long ago that the government seemed content to let AIDS patients die, because the disease apparently affected only undesirables. (Ronald Reagan, whose accession to power coincided almost exactly with the reported onset of the disease, never even uttered the term "AIDS" until the latter stages of his presidency.) If AIDS activists are still wary of the government's intentions, it's only because they have every reason to be.

Universal, mandatory testing is a real bad idea for other reasons, of course—the test's chief flaw is that it doesn't report a positive until long after initial infection—but it is the potential fallout of such a policy that causes AIDS activists to balk. Their agenda, then, makes perfect sense: it only strives to protect people with AIDS, both their lives and their rights. We shouldn't remain silent when the influential Buchanan, who cares for neither, tries to infect the debate.

Look Here, Buster

(In the "Hypothalamus Issue," September 13) R. Pela says that "the only difference between straight men and gay men is that straight men want women to do their laundry and suck their cocks and gay men want guys to do their laundry and suck their cocks."

I'd like to say that the only difference between Pela and most gays is that he has a really bad attitude_about life.

Name Withheld Phoenix

And the only difference between me and you is that I am asshole who owns a newspaper.

—Ed.

Your "Hypothalamus Quiz" (September 13) was a blast. My lover and I used it as an entertainment at our last brunch. We decided that having brunch was an indication that we had "teeny tiny" hypothalamuses, and lo and behold, our scores proved us right!

Larry Estrada Phoenix

Oh.

-Ed.

I'm Sorry. Please Forgive Me.

In your "Heterophobia Issue" (September 27), you printed a letter from me that took exception to (R. Pela's) characterization in an earlier issue of gays as "hairdressers and designers." In the same issue, you (printed) another editorial by Pela which...shows us as recruiting children into homosexuality, and again as hairdressers!

Pela seems to think that gays want to constantly read about themselves as (the) stereotypes we've fought all along to end. I, for one, do not. I refuse to read any more of this dangerous, uncaring trash. How sad that Pela's brain is so small.

Name Withheld Phoenix

Yeah, but I have an enormous...oh, never mind.

Huh?

My terrible twin brothers, James and John, phoned me in Vancouver and said you wanted to know why men are "terrible unfeeling sex hogs."

Man was given many things which were meant to enhance his short stay on this planet. One of these God-given gifts has been suppressed by civilization since birth. Of course, this precious gift I'm talking about, that society makes man keep tucked away, is his feeling. The closest thing he is ever encouraged to boast, brag, or keep any sort of track of, is orgasm.

Kisses,

Tish Bingham Vancouver, Canada

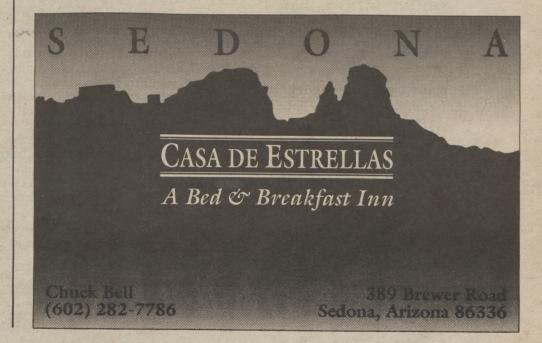

Apparently, you and I have been dating the same guys.

Why are men terrible, unfeeling sex hogs? That's easy. Because society demands it.

Thank God we're not expected to remain virgin queens.

Symbolically Speaking

who consider themselves part of the lesbian and gay community are familiar with at least a couple of prevalent visual symbols. The lambda and the pink triangle are frequently worn and displayed as a simple representation of gayness. In addition, the pink triangle has been used to remind us that oppression continues on the

by Ellen M. Young

planet, as illustrated by its use in the concentration camps of Nazi Germany. Whether or not one has studied the history of these symbols, there is a general knowledge in the community that there is something vaguely gay about them. Not so with the non-gay community.

While some progressive or well-read heterosexuals are aware of these two symbols, most are not. Try mentioning the word "lambda" to a non-gay person and you'll likely hear in reply, "Isn't that a fraternity?" Others will recognize it as a Greek letter, but that's about it. As for the pink triangle, forget it. Most people don't even realize that gay people were imprisoned in the camps as a consequence of their orientation. Nor is it generally known that a number of different symbols were used to identify the prisoners with their so-called crimes. The yellow star has been the only standout symbol in the history books.

A more recent symbol of the lesbian and gay community is the rainbow flag which, while gaining in popularity, still draws little recognition. This is partly due to its confusion with Jesse Jackson's Rainbow

The yin/yang is an ancient Chinese spiritual symbol of balance which, in modern times, has become focused on androgyny, the balance of feminine and masculine energies or characteristics. I have two pieces of jewelry containing the yin/yang, and I wear them to symbolize my own expression of this balance. It is probably my favorite visual symbol, as it speaks so strongly to my sense of identity. However, for some people, particularly the young, the yin/yang is simply in vogue at the moment. A few may understand its meaning, but they don't really think much about it. For the fashionconscious, it represents little more than a pretty swirly design to wear at rock concerts. You know, it's like, kind of a Sixties thing.

Some symbols are understood by virtually everyone, but are considered with varying degrees of seriousness. Most married heterosexuals wear wedding rings. Some gay and lesbian couples wear rings, while others do not. The symbolic meaning can also be transferred to other types of jewelry, such as earrings or necklaces. For couples, such jewelry is perceived symbolically on both public and private levels. Publicly, it is an "outward and visible sign" that a willing commitment has been made by one person to another. Privately, it represents the same commitment, but often much more. For many, it carries an implied promise, such as fidelity. For some, it may represent a sense of security that one is not

For some couples, the commitments and feelings are taken seriously, while the symbol is not. They may wear rings during a ceremony, such as a wedding, but take them off to do the dishes. For others, the rings are not to be removed for such trivial reasons; doing so would symbolize a lack of commitment or a feeling of insecurity about the relationship. I have always fallen into the latter

Years ago, a friend gave me a ring as a symbol of thanks for helping him out during some difficult times. I wore it for weeks, perhaps months, before I was able to take it off. And when I finally did, I cried.

In non-platonic relationships, when given a ring, I never took it off until I felt sure the union was coming to an end. Until then, if I started to feel insecure, I would slide the ring towards the tip of my finger without actually taking it off. If the ring had to be cleaned, it was removed by the person from whom I'd received it, then replaced by the same person. This was not a superstition; I did not expect any sort of retribution if I were to remove the ring by myself. It was simply a symbolic way of expressing my feelings. After all, symbolic actions are often easier than conversation.

Recently, I removed a ring that I'd worn for the past three years. I didn't find this particularly difficult, as I'd been thinking about it for some time. I was also angry. But at some point, if it feels right to do so, I may put the ring back on. I rule my own symbols; they do not rule me.

Any given symbol need not have meaning for everyone, nor may everyone attach the same meaning to the same symbol. As an example, I am not offended when someone burns the American flag, but I do find it annoying to see someone wearing a pink triangle with the point facing upwards. I do not have the right, however, to tear that triangle off someone else's shirt and berate the person for wearing it upside down. Nor should political conservatives have the right to dictate what one does with an American flag after purchasing it. It is not the symbol, in and of itself, which deserves respect. It is the meaning or emotion behind the symbol which should be respected, as one would respect free speech. The wearing or displaying of a symbol is, in fact, symbolic speecn.

Each of us has something different to say, and we will inevitably choose different methods of saying it. We will not understand every message we hear, any more than we will recognize every symbol we see. But some of us will get some of it. Meanwhile, cultivate your own garden. Peace, man.

32 Reasons Why The Opera Is Better Than Any Man

1. A performance of La Boheme will never come in your mouth. 2. The opera does not say it will call and then never does. 3. The opera does not fall in love with you when you'd rather it just wiped off and went home. 4. Aida arias will not give you herpes. 5. Orfeo will not leave dirty dishes in the sink. 6. The opera does not expect you to sleep in the wet spot. 7. The opera will not laugh at your new haircut. 8. Carmen will not ask you to go "dutch" for dinner. 9. Donizetti would never pose for Inches. 10. A Bizet overture will not leave strange hair in your brush. 11. Wagner will not overdraw your checking account. 12. Whoever heard of a performance of Don Pasquale leaving pecker tracks on your brand new Liz Claiborne sheets? 13. A performance of Les Troyens does not scream when it sees a spider. 14. Frederick C. Corey:

The Tiger Beat Interview

Fred Corey's lover, Kim Bauley, died of liver cancer last January. Months of mourning led to Corey's The Death of a Married Man, a solo performance piece he wrote which employs slides, audio loops, and pre-recorded music to explore gay relationships, stereotypes, and death. One reason that Corey, an assistant professor of communication at Arizona State University, wrote about Bauley and their three years together "was to break the silence about issues important to gay men."

Worried Into Performance

The Death of a Married Man could have been schmaltzy. It has all the trappings of a three-hanky tearjerker.

I hope I stayed away from the schmaltz. I'm steeped in literary criticism. All of my academic training is in literary criticism. That provides some safeguards against my work getting too predictable. But like most contemporary literature, Death borders on being very personal. There's a trend toward that in modern writing.

Does the self-indulgence of performance art embarrass you?

Yes. Very much. But I'm in a what-the-fuck mode.

You make Kim's brother, Craig, the villain in this piece.

He shows up that way; sort of as a prototype homophobe. But he actually turned out to be a nice guy.

You say in your script that when Kim discovered he had liver cancer he called you on the phone and the two of you "screeched" at one another. I first heard you use the word "screech" at a reading in Tucson. What is the difference between screeching and screaming?

Screeching is more primal. It is not based in terror or grief or any other emotion I could mention. If a plane were crashing, the people on board would not be screaming, they would be screeching.

When Kim's mother asked for Kim's wedding ring, you bought another ring to give her in its place. But you bought the ring at Target.

They sell perfectly fine jewelry at Target. Besides, his mother never knew.

You make a rather irreverent reference to why God invented valum.

I never used to believe. In valium.

What purpose has writing this performance piece served?

The writing of it was cathartic. The performance of it is for social change. To not be silent about our sexuality makes for important social change. Before Kim died, I just thought that anybody who had a clue knew that I am gay, but I never said it. Now, the performing of it is the saying of it.

Are you trespassing on the privacy of the people you mention in your story?

I worried about that. I refer to people by name. I include my mother's letters. While I was writing, I wondered, "Is this ethical?" But what I decided was that I'm only talking about other people as they relate to me. For me to have to be silent about the way other people treat me, in order to protect them, is an irony I don't need to live with.

What do you tell people who assume that your lover died from complications of AIDS?

Nothing.

The Death script mentions that Kim's death "rocked the gay community." How?

I cut that part out. I was exaggerating, but Kim's death did come as a shock. Kim was popular, he had about a hundred close friends. No one knew we were dealing with his death until just before it happened.

You say that you've "worried yourself into performance."

My job at ASU is in performance studies. For me to think about anything other than Kim's death right now would be impossible. I think about him day and night. I have to get on with my life, my job. So I have incorporated my life into my job. I'm lucky—it's a good fit.

You still think about him all the time?

Sure. If I forget, I'm going to have to remember all over again.

If you were a kitchen appliance, which one would you be?

A toaster. Because you push it down and it comes back up again.

Interview by R. Pela.

Frederick Corey will perform The Death of a Married Man at Phoenix Shanti on October 11 and 12 and at Kerr Cultural Center on October 19. See the "Culture Club" listing on page 10 for more information.

Themes For Crying

by Frederick C. Corey

Frederick C. Corey's Death of a Married Man deals with diverse issues: the loss of a lover, coming out, gay marriage, romance, and sexual awareness. In these excerpts from Corey's new performance work, he tours childhood angst, self-pity, and death.

HUMAN SEXUALITY

I have always done very well in school, getting mostly As and Bs. I got one C. In Human Sexuality class. That was my third clue.

Learning about the facts of life was my second clue. 1968. I was in the kitchen. My mother was cooking over the gas stove, and I was walking past her when she said, without even looking at me, "Honey, I want to talk to you about something."

I stopped, and—in that eleven-year-old too-tall-for-my-coordination sort of way—leaned against the brilloed white Frigidaire.

"What about?" I asked.

"In class tomorrow, you will be learning about something, and I want to talk to you first."

I stood in what had become my mother's kitchen, looking at the floor (which had been recently covered with the latest in suburban ease: kitchen carpeting. Wash it once and the soap never goes away. Rub and suds).

"The penis," she said, "gets hard and enters the vagina." Everything was phrased in terms of husband and wife, women and children, and when my mother finished the technical details, she launched into a celebration of her uterus.

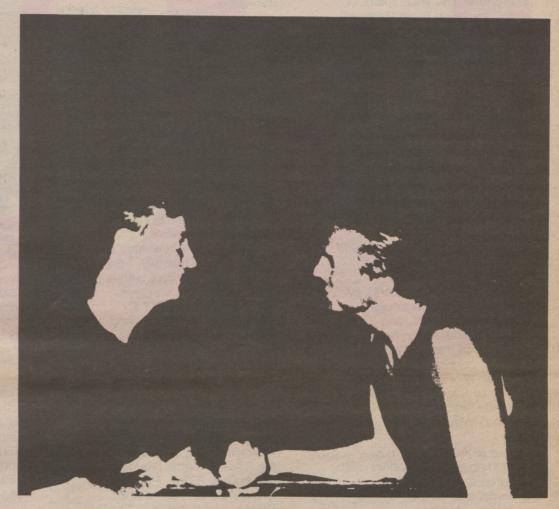

I was dizzy from the details, and I leaned against the refrigerator thinking, "If this is what we do for birth, I wonder what we do for death." Not being too interested in her treatise, I had plenty of time to consider the options.

Could the parents do it again? No, that would prevent a second child, or kill the first. Could this operation be completed in reverse? No. And besides, who would do it?

Could you determine your own death by having this done to you? No, you'd only get pregnant.

I would have to ask my older brother.
I knew my mother was coming to a close of her treatise when her tone of voice changed. "When unmarried people do this in the back seat of a car, it's called 'fucking.' Nice people don't even use the word."

My first clue was falling madly in love with one of the lifeguards at the Beverly Hills Athletic Club. I was six.

I worry about Kim-even now.

I worry about how much he suffered, I worry about how much he hurt. I am worried about: what does happen to a person after death? I am worried about the day he cried because he had to give himself a bath out of a plastic bowl; I am worried about how much he hurt when his bones, filled with cancer, creaked when he tried to stand up; I am worried about the mental anguish he must have known the night he was in intensive care, the night he kept his eyes pitched—wide open—all night long.

I am worried about the inside of his guts as he screeched when the nurse crammed the nasal-gastral tube down his throat (and about his fury when the nurse said, "Hmm. I wish we had a size 10 tube!"); I am worried about people who cannot so easily convince themselves that they did not cause the death of the person they loved.

I am worried, next to death. I have worried myself into an ulcer. I have worried myself into performance.

THEMES

I never used to cry. I didn't know how. But when Kim was diagnosed with cancer, I learned in a big hurry. At first, I cried in the car, to and from the hospital.

Then I started taking walks through the park next to Scottsdale Memorial Hospital. At a distant corner of the park is a beautiful Louise Nevelson sculpture, and I would walk around and around and around the sculpture, wailing faithfully, and when I was through, I would return to the hospital.

Then I started crying with Kim. After everyone would leave, we would sit and cry. After he was dead and I was alone, I made a minor career out of crying, but I discovered I needed themes.

Here was one theme: I feel so sorry for you. Here was another: I miss you so much. And another: I would rather be dead.

The rap genre is not known for its political correctness. Despite the presence of artists with strong, positive social messages, rap generally has a well-deserved reputation for glorifying violence and denigrating women. What shouldn't be overlooked when rap-bashing, however, is that the same could be said for most types of music aimed primarily at youngsters, e.g., heavy metal.

Unlike metal, though, exceptions abound in the hip hop nation. The strongest purveyor of sociopolitical messages is probably Chuck D of Public Enemy, who continues the fight on PE's fourth album, Apocalypse 91—The Enemy Strikes Black (Def Jam/Columbia). Though perhaps musically less interesting than the previous two releases, Apocalypse doesn't pull any punches when it comes to railing against a white establishment that continues, 128 years after emancipation, to victimize African Americans. A highlight is "1 Million Bottlebags," which decries the marketing of alcoholic beverages to blacks and closes with a collage of advertising sound bites. "By the Time | Get to Arizona" is a fascinating indictment of our state—one that on the emotional level of this recording is hard to argue with. PE's second rapper and comic relief Flavor Flav lets loose with a hilarious rebuttal to the New York Post, which recently published a sensationalistic account of one of Flav's domestic quarrels. Despite the humor, "A Letter to the New York Post" is the lowest point of the album in terms of enlightenment: not only does Flav shamelessly defend beating on his partner. but, in an aside, likens himself to Jimmy Cagney (who beat up a "fagney"). Ugh.

Despite this strain of homophobia (which also appeared briefly on their last album), PE is making progress. And even at a notch below previous efforts, their sonic assault is still mighty formidable.

A Tribe Called Quest takes a gentler approach, both in message and music. On their latest, The Low End Theory (Jive), they expand on their things that set last year's debut apart from the crowd.

Legendary jazz bassist Ron Carter makes an appearance on one Low End track, while others sample everything from Grant Green to Weather Report.

Lyrically, too, Quest is less jazz influence—one of the Lyrically, too, Quest is less strident than Public Enemy, and less prone to cliché than most of the rest. While occasionally rhapsodizing about getting their dicks wet, they nevertheless are enlightened enough to inveigh against date rape (a logical follow-up to last year's "Description of a Fool," which tackled domestic violence against women—are you listening, Flav?).

Veering between serious and silly (check out "What"), A Tribe Called Quest ends up charting a wholly original course.

Perhaps best known as a singer with Stan Kenton's band of some 40 years ago, June Christy, along with conductor/arranger Pete Rugulo (another Kenton confederate), is showcased on Something Cool (Capitol Jazz), a 24-track reissue culled from two LPs and several singles issued between 1953 and 1955 between 1953 and 1955.

Especially when framed by Rugulo's lilting and subdued arrangements, Christy's soothing voice contains a hint of melancholy, notably on "Midnight Sun," "The Night We Called It a Day," "A Stranger Called the Blues," and the evocative title track.

It's not exactly jazz, but this budget-priced CD gives the curious listener a good idea of what the West Coast "cool" school of the early '50s was all about. For aficionados, this reissue is must-have.

big screen review

Paradise: Melanie Griffith and Don Johnson star in this tearjerker as a couple with all the symptoms of the dreaded "horrible secret" film cliche. If you've seen any weepy TV movie, you know the signs: they mope around the scenery, wear earth tones and speak much too eloquently about life for the poor-white-trashcharacters-without-collegedegrees that they play. This is the type of film where everyone has problems, but nobody talks about them, so there's a lot of implied subtext about the "pain of the ordinary folk." Maybe the filmmakers should have shown a little more of that on the screen, and they would have had a more emotionally satisfying movie. But as it stands, Paradise is lost.

I'm afraid I'm a fag
And so, dear, are you!

Hello darlinks! Why thank you! I'm so glad to be here!

So I was lying in this gutter by 307 the other night and this newspaper mogul is telling me he thinks I'd be great doing a society...uh...gossip... uh...happenings column for his nelly little rag. So now I can't go to Burger King, I have to go to AZ '88. I can't buy a six pack, I have to go to Winkie's for drinkies. I can't rent a video, I have to watch one in a booth at the Castle...um,

So here I am: emerged fully formed out of the foamy green cheesy wake of the Gossip Issue. I sit in front of my VDT, incinerating from the inside out from all the magneto-electromicrowave emissions burning their way into my skull as I type myself sideways. It kind of puts a twist in my consciousness, and it's cheaper than

To celebrate the inauguration of my new scandal-free (so far) report of valley kiester-bandit capers, I attended six (six!) events in one busy evening last weekend. Since I am more or less starting from scratch, and since I was determined to get material out of you, my hitherto unsuspecting public, I had to come up with a gimmick: "What," I inquired, "is the one thing about yourself that you would like to keep out of the papers?"

At Wink's, responses came to me like this:
"My makeup secrets"..."The many partners of my past—more than Geraldo!"..."Is that thing on?
Bitch!"..."That I can hardly wait to leave Phoenix" (from an apparently disgruntled twenty-one-year-old houseguest of yours truly who, in better times, resides in San Francisco—but then again, doesn't everybody?)..."That I'm just another queer out to sexually blackmail every conservative Republican in the state" (you heard it here first, Ev!).

At the Zone Magazine/Oblique Gallery blowout, people were less subdued: "I'm reserving my comments for Entertainment Tonight"..."I'll have to let you know after I have a few beers" (sounds like an alcohol problem to me—good thing this was an anonymous survey!)... "It would be anything about you, Girl!" (I hate that one!)... "That Christian has little horses on his tie"... "Everything about me has been in the papers, I have nothing left to hide" (May I make a suggestion?)... "My bra size"... "That I'm from Ohio and that for years I exclusively dated short homosexuals from Cleveland"... "My penis. I hate getting newsprint on my penis"... "That we were at a Spirit of the Senses salon and we shared about ourselves in a public forum" (IMPORTANT NOTE: Thomas Houlon is heterosexual!)... "I just don't want anyone to know that I have a tiny hangnail" (And neither, readers, do we!).

Off, then, to the Silver Dollar, and just as things were getting interesting, my fucking tape recorder broke. I almost wet my panties. It was as if Andy Warhol had descended screaming from the New York nightlife scene in the sky (it's also quite dead), and with one swipe of his pasty, gifted hand, grabbed my Olympus Pearlcorder S912 and flung it across the Dollar's dance cavern.

The recorder may have stopped, but I didn't. My companion and I continued on to a private birthday bash (I only crashed because they forgot to invite me); Cactus Jack's (why, why, why do you close at one a.m. now?); and finally, Trax (which has been mercifully accessorized with one ultra-tripindicular di, who better call me so I can start borrowing tapes)...I wouldn't have known to go to the Silver Dollar if the very attractive and relatively eligible (relative to whether or not you're a girl) Mannix X hadn't pelted me with thirteen promo cardlets while I was dancing far too ambitiously at Foster's the Sunday prior...Bobby's, in its usual attempt to "keep up with the times" (?) has initiated a cover charge. Two dollars gets you in and gets you a drinky. Bring a date...Barbara X. was telling me the other day how she only travels in Glamourvators. Apparently, five of the elevators in her office building are acceptable as vertical transportation and one is not. It lacks the necessary marble and glass accessories and she absolutely refuses to enter it under any circumstances. Could it be we have an unfashionablevator in downtown Phoenix?...Q: How many people from Brooklyn does it take to screw in a light bulb? A: Fuck you!...And who was seen entering the Castle at one in the morning (then again, who wasn't)?...Paul Markow's studio was the setting for a glamorous birthday thing for John X. A black and white affair. David X. looked fagulous, dripping as he was with black fun fur. Richard X., who NEVER GOES OUT ANYMORE, showed up for this one. As a special, added retro-treat, Cowboy X and Construction Worker X from the Village People made a surprise appearance. (See? Fun things do happen in Phoenix!) But the low point of my evening was when Eileen X., a printer princess from way back, deserted me and my microphone to dance with a woman!...After Trax, I like to drop in at the Gopher Club: real men, real rodents...If it weren't for Neil Cohen, Molly Kellogg would be the most beautiful woman in town...What is the world coming to when a club creature like Joel X. shows up at the Silver Dollar with braces? Don't worry, baby, there are still dozens who would be perfectly willing to suck the food particles out from your mouth of metal...Todd Bemis Rosin is working at the ribbon counter of Neiman Marcus in San Francisco...Why is Charlie Harrison selling his house?...It would appear to be extremely bad form to argue one's way back into 307 after practically causing a barroom brawl (God knows why!)-especially when one's cheek implants have slid so noticeably down one's face. No cheeky, no drinky...A tall matron had poor (sixty chandeliers and still poor?) Randy Gorbette by the ear when she dragged him around her happy home ("Look at those light bulbs...have you ever seen light bulbs like that?") during a recent mega-bash in her interestingly renovated Paradise Valley residence...Calvin Martin? Cactus Jack's?...How does ACT UP pull a Bush out of the Grand Canyon?...Kirby Holt and Scott Harnisch have gone to Boyfriendland. We assume they met in the chorus of 42nd Street, which closed October 6. Will their romance have an extended run?...Which local hangout has great-well, good food, reasonable prices, comely decor, late hours and no patrons? I'm not saying, but I think it's a shame! Darlings, are you all grunge-aholics? Go somewhere nice for a change! But change your shoes first...Mr. Bircumshaw!...Every time you ask Ron Barnes how his husband is, all he says is "Bitchy." Romance is hell...And finally: Bruce Kurtz! Do they still itch?...Well, darlinks, I would have more to offer you in this, my world premiere column, but I was entertaining an out-of-town guest this weekend and I'm spending all my free time pulling curly hairs out from between my teeth. Just remember: it's a Girl world out there now, and if I have anything to say about it, you're going to be FAMOUS!

Don't just worry about HIV. Do something about it.

If you think you are at risk for HIV infection, now's the time to consider counseling and testing. If you test positive, work with a doctor to make decisions that are right for you. The earlier this happens, the more medical care can help.

Talk to a doctor, your health department, or other local AIDS resources. Or call your State or local AIDS hotline, or the National AIDS Hotline at 1-800-342-AIDS. Call 1-800-243-7889 (TTY) for deaf access.

Are Looks The Only Thing He Has That Kill?

Last year alone, over 70,000 men and women died from AIDS. Today there are an estimated 2,000,000 who could be infected without even knowing it.

So the next time you see someone you think is drop dead gorgeous, just keep that in mind.
