

Barry Goldwater, Republican nominee for President, 1964, U.S.

Senator from Arizona: I am a hobbyist. I enjoy photography, flying, camping, boating, book collecting, writing -- I could go on and on.

It is to these hobbies that I look for peace of mind when I need to get away from the things that bother me in the everyday life of being a citizen of this world.

Without a doubt, I find my greatest solace walking in the Grand Canyon, photographing it, because here I really think I get closer to God and His peacefulness than any other place I know. I can say the same for boating in a lesser way. To go out on the ocean and meet the challenges of tide and water and wind, to get to someplace that is remote, brings me almost as peaceful a feeling as does the Canyon.
