Mall committee reaches consensus

By KEVIN SHEH
State Press

A committee that was bitterly divided over several aspects of a proposed policy for the general use of ASU malls set aside most of its differences and came to a consensus Tuesday night.

However, the eight-man Campus Appearance Working Group, which includes representatives from each vice-presidential area and one student, was still torn over a plan that would charge certain organizations a rental fee for tables and chairs.

Committee members concerned the mall proposal would adversely affect student interests said they were encouraged with the new turn of events.

Associated Students of ASU Activities Vice President Frank McCune, a member of the committee, said he was pleased with the results of the meeting, but added that more work still needed to be done.

"We finally came up with a student-oriented proposal — which is what we need," he said. "I think we found out that what's existing isn't necessarily bad."

Despite the occasional divisiveness of the committee, Chairman Jennus Burton, associate vice president of Business Affairs, also said he was encouraged with the overall result, adding that he expects the committee to meet its Dec. 15 deadline.

"We'll be close," he said. "It's doable."

The controversy over mall appearance began in June when ASU President Lattie Coor formed the committee to investigate commercial and student organizational use of the malls and kiosks on campus.

Student leaders at the time feared that the move could lead to banning student organizations from operating booths on the malls, or that the universities would charge students for the use of the malls.

Their fears were realized late last month when Burton generated a draft proposing that student organizations intent on fund raising pay to set up shop on campus.

In addition, the draft recommended that all revenue be deposited centrally and a committee be formed to review Student Affairs' calendar of events.

Members of the committee, student leaders and other student advocates united against Burton's draft, claiming that organizations should not be charged for mall use.

Other aspects of the proposal would create more red tape and make ASU less

ASASU post filled; 3-month battle subsides

By KENNETH BROWN
State Press

The Associated Students of ASU Senate on Tuesday unanimously confirmed Lisa Shelly as this year's elections coordinator, putting to rest a three-month controversy surrounding the position.

"I'm not so much relieved as I am happy for the University," said College of Liberal Arts and Sciences Sen. Vicki Levine, who heads the election screening committee. "Now the job will get started and we'll have super elections in May."

The elections coordinator is responsible for overseeing spring elections, which includes handling complaints concerning campaign violations. Shelly's first responsibility upon taking office will be to choose an assistant.

The confirmation — which came in a special session — occurred almost two months later than last year's appointment of Brian Boley, a 1990 ASU transportation graduate. The holdup was caused by two official nominee resignations this year and at least four other potential nominees who backed out of the nomination process.

Earlier this year, election coordinator nominee Sarah Haske resigned after it was discovered four ASASU senators had breached nominations bylaws in choosing her. The withdrawal convinced College of Social Work Sen. Bob Carroll to submit a letter of resignation that he later rescinded.

The Senate's second setback came two weeks ago when Eric Maul, another nominee, pulled out of the running under conflict-of-interest charges stemming from his membership in ASASU Activities Vice President Frank McCune's fraternity.

Marriott limits meal service to cushion financial loss

By TEENA CHADWELL
State Press

Mandatory meal plans will end at all ASU residence halls this spring and could result in the closure of three dining halls, ASU officials said.

Because of a 75 percent ASU dormitory occupancy rate resulting in an operating loss for Marriott Food Service, students will be switched from mandatory to voluntary meal plans, Residence Life Director Cliff Osborne said, adding that Marriott recommended closing the three dining halls.

The three cafeterias currently slated for closure are at Palo Verde East, Palo Verde West and Mariposa residence halls, but no final decision has been made, Osborne said.

Marriott general manager Carol Warren said she could not comment on the recommendation until the end of the week.

Closure options will be discussed in a Thursday meeting with Osborne, the Residence Life Association and Marriott.

After the change, students can use their meal plan card in any of the remaining cafeterias at ASU and the MU's retail operations, excluding Pizza Hut, the Country Store and McDonald's, Osborne said.

Students also will receive a monetary equivalency for meals they purchase at MU restaurants. This will include $2.20 for breakfast, $2.60 for lunch and $3 for dinner, said Aileen Paulino, secretary for the Residence Hall Association.

Brian Mullin, vice president of campus affairs for the RHA, said he approves of the plan.

"Anytime you give people a choice, and they're not forced to do something, they like that better," he said.

Osborne said he thinks students will prefer the change from a mandatory to voluntary meal plan.

"There would be no change in costs to this year's students," Osborne said.

However, next fall, students will pay an increased rate for meal plans. Osborne said this is an alternative to a 22 to 25 percent increase that students would face if the mandatory meal plan continued.

Osborne said he wants Marriott to keep the cost increase under 10 percent for voluntary meal plans next fall, adding this increase is partially based on inflation.

Students pilot phone registration program

By ANDREW FAUGHT
State Press

Students dreading registration's long lines and high anxiety can breathe a sigh of relief knowing ASU's telephone registration pilot program went into effect Monday.

The project, which runs until Dec. 13, is designed to improve the efficiency of the registration process and is a step closer to achieving campuswide phone registration, said Lou Ann Denny, associate registrar.

The service, called InTouch, targets approximately 4,000 sophomores and juniors enrolled in the College of Business. The students were given instruction packets from the Registrar's Office for the system's use, Denny said, adding that 500 calls were processed Monday.

The system enables students in the pilot group to enter their ASU and personal identification numbers to access menu options that range from dropping or adding classes to fee information.

"I (phone registered) when I went to community college and was working full time," said Andy Wilhelm, a sophomore business major. "It will save a lot of time. I'm sick of waiting in lines."

The College of Business was chosen for the program because registration in the school's curriculum does not require advisement or a college stamp of approval. The college also has had previous experience with touch-tone functionality, Denny said.

"We'll be doing another pilot for fall of '91 and will be adding mandatory advising," Denny said. "An adviser would be able to enter a code on a system that a student has been advised."

She added that freshmen were excluded from the current program because they are often subject to advisory requirements regardless of their colleges. The addition of seniors would have made the group too large, Denny said.

Assistant Registrar Mary Neary said the University hopes to use the telephone in the future to allow students to obtain grades and other information.

"We would like to have our university be a model on the cutting edge of technology," Neary said. "We want to better serve the students."

To meet this goal, Neary said a questionnaire will be sent to participants in the program to determine its effectiveness.

"(Phone registration) sounds good to me," said sophomore business major Karen Schuelke. "It would eliminate a lot of the hassle."

Denny agreed students should be given more registration options and deserve phone registration alternatives.

"I encourage the students in the College of Business to try it," she said. "The more the system is tested, the better it will be in the future."

U.S., Soviets want Jan. 15 Iraqi retreat

The United States and the Soviet Union have fixed Jan. 15 as a deadline for Iraq to get out of Kuwait, or face the possibility of a military strike to drive it out, diplomats said Tuesday.

Three Americans, waving Iraqi flags and criticizing their government, arrived in Jordan after being freed by Saddam Hussein.

The deadline for an Iraqi withdrawal had been the only sticking point in a draft U. N. Security Council resolution agreed upon by the five permanent members of the council. The measure is expected to be voted on by the full council on Thursday.

In a fresh sign that the Baghdad government is bracing for war, the Pentagon said Iraq is rapidly increasing its troop strength in Kuwait and southern Iraq. It said Iraq has 450,000 troops in the region, an increase of 20,000 over last week.

The chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, meanwhile, questioned whether it is really in the "vital interest" of the United States to use military force to liberate Kuwait, the oil-rich emirate Iraq seized Aug. 2.

The freed Americans, whose families had traveled to Iraq to plead with Saddam for their release, told reporters at the Amman airport that the Bush administration had ignored their plight.

"I was not released with help from my government," said John Stevenson of Panama City, Fla. "It was my family who did it."

The United States has demanded the unconditional release of all of the hundreds of foreigners held hostage in Iraq, and the State Department has discouraged private hostage-freeing missions.

Another freed American, Clyde Jesse of Buffalo Grove, Ill., suggested the United States should negotiate with Saddam. "I believe it is time we started talking," he said.

The third freed American was Fred Harrington of Bellevue, Wash. Ten Britons and five Germans were released as well. The women in the British group carried flowers; the Americans waved the U. S. and Iraqi flags.

At the United Nations, the stage was set for a Security Council meeting on Thursday to consider the strongest measure yet against Iraq. The resolution calls on Iraq to release all foreign hostages, withdraw its troops and restore Kuwait's government by the first of the year — and authorizes use of "all necessary means" to force it to do so.

Western diplomats speaking on condition of anonymity said Secretary of State James Baker and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze had settled on Jan. 15 as the deadline for an Iraqi withdrawal. The diplomats said they had reached the agreement in the past 24 hours.

Britain and the United States had favored Jan. 1, but had said the question was open to negotiations.

The United States had already secured the backing of the other permanent members of the Security Council for the measure. The permanent members — the United States, the Soviet Union, China, Britain and France — have the power to veto council resolutions.

Thatcher successor announced

LONDON (AP) — John Major, endorsed by Margaret Thatcher as the politician closest to her heart, was elected by the Conservative Party Tuesday night to succeed her as prime minister.

Major, 47, fell two votes short of winning a majority in voting among the 372 Conservative Party members of Parliament, but his two opponents quickly conceded defeat and the party confirmed Major as the winner.

Thatcher, ending 11½ years in power, intended to submit her resignation to Queen Elizabeth II on Wednesday morning, and Major would then be called to lead the government.

Major, the chancellor of the exchequer, emerged from his official residence at 11 Downing St. Tuesday night smiling and holding hands with his wife, Norma. Inside, Thatcher, who came next door from the prime minister's 10 Downing St. residence, embraced Major. "I am thrilled and delighted that John Major is to succeed me," the "Iron Lady" said in a statement released by aides.

"It is a very exciting thing to become leader of the Conservative Party, and particularly exciting, I think, to follow one of the most remarkable leaders the Conservative Party has ever had," Major said.

"Our job now I think is quite clear. We are going to unite totally and absolutely, and we're going to win the next general election," said Major, who will be the youngest British prime minister in this century.

Major received 185 votes, two short of a majority. Former Defense Secretary Michael Heseltine received 131 and Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd had 56.

Hurd and Heseltine conceded within minutes, and party officials declared Major elected.

The party had been torn by the sudden and unexpected leadership challenge by Heseltine, who last week stopped Mrs. Thatcher short of victory in the first round of the leadership race.

Thatcher had not wanted to leave office, but she decided to Witness testifies DeConcini offered him 'improper deals'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former top federal regulator testified Tuesday that Sen. Dennis DeConcini improperly offered him a deal on behalf of savings and loan owner Charles H. Keating Jr., and that three other "Keating Five" senators acquiesced in the proposal.

Edwin Gray, a star witness at the Senate Ethics Committee's hearings into the five senators' relationships with Keating, said DeConcini's offer at a 1987 meeting will be "etched in my mind forever."

"I considered it improper," he declared. "The whole setting was an intimidating one."

He said DeConcini, apparently speaking for the other three senators as well, asked that regulators not apply to Keating's embattled Lincoln Savings and Loan Association a rule limiting risky investments.

DeConcini, D-Ariz., referred to Keating during the meeting as "our friend from Lincoln," said Gray, the former chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

None of the five senators was present for his testimony.

Keating was the chairman of the now-failed Lincoln S&L when the evening meeting took place in DeConcini's office on April 2, 1987. The committee is trying to decide whether the five senators intervened improperly for Keating, a political donor who along with associates contributed $1.3 million to the senators' campaigns and causes.

The hearing recessed for the day just after DeConcini's lawyer, James Hamilton, began cross-examination of Gray. His examination followed a contentious cross-examination by Thomas Green, lawyer for Sen. Donald Riegle Jr., D-Mich.

Charles F. C. Ruff, attorney for Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, briefly questioned Gray; John Dowd, representing Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz. declined to cross-examine the witness; and William Taylor, representing Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., awaited his turn.

All the senators except Riegle attended the meeting with Gray and all have denied that a deal was offered for Lincoln — which was in deep trouble with Gray's regulators.

Gray testified DeConcini asked that the risky-investment rule not be applied to Lincoln and added, "If you do that, we'll get our friend from Lincoln to make more home loans."

The charade bowl New rules mask college sports' commercial slant

Joel Horn
Guest columnist

Numerous scandals have beset intercollegiate athletics in recent years. Seldom does a week go by without new revelations about National Collegiate Athletic Association rules violations by major university football or basketball programs. Each revelation is followed by righteous vows by university authorities and the NCAA that college athletics are going to be cleaned up.

Rather than address the inherent structural problems in an attempt to reform major college athletics, however, the NCAA and its member universities disguise the fundamental issues by repeatedly aiming the most punitive regulations primarily toward student athletes instead of the overall programs.

Student athletes are being prostituted; they are the means to a selfish end.

The NCAA's attempts to place dominant blame for the evils of big-time college athletics on student athletes can be seen clearly in Proposition 48, the imposition of mandatory drug testing programs, the punishment of athletes for improper distribution of complimentary tickets, the refusal to allow collegiate athletes to endorse products and the unwillingness to permit payment to college athletes.

Proposition 48 (bylaw 5-1-(j) in the NCAA Manual) requires that, to be eligible for athletic participation, incoming freshmen have a 2.0 grade-point average in an 11-course curriculum and a minimum score of 700 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test or 15 on the American College Test. In imposing these requirements, the NCAA can publicly declare its interest in having qualified students as college athletes.

Critics have charged that Proposition 48 discriminates against the underprivileged, particularly blacks, with its use of standardized test scores in determining freshman eligibility. But many black leaders who recognized the unequal and adverse effects of Proposition 48 on black athletes supported the passage of this legislation because to have opposed it would have seemed to have implied that they were not in favor of academic standards.

This charade for academic standards has deflected attention away from the commercial structure of major collegiate athletic programs and focused it on the athletes.

The only reason the academic standards problem exists is that university officials have been willing to admit academically unqualified students and keep them eligible for one purpose: to help university athletic teams remain competitive in the world of commercialized sports.

In the November 1989 issue of Inside Sports magazine, Tom Penders, head basketball coach at the University of Texas, was quoted as saying: "What bothers me is, schools take a kid who is a high-risk student and don't graduate him; (they) in effect use the kid for a few years, then spit him out. If a kid plays four years of varsity basketball and doesn't graduate, it's kind of obvious what's going on."

Proposition 48 does nothing to alter the major reasons why universities recruit academically unprepared athletes. Since it went into effect in September 1986, coaches have found a variety of ways to circumvent its purpose, including clustering a disproportionate percentage of once-admitted athletes into selected majors as compared to the overall university percentage in the same major.

Such is the case at the University of Southern California, where, according to the 1990 USC football media guide, a remarkable 43 percent (26 of 61) of the football players with declared majors are housed under the academic unit of public administration, as compared to less than 2 percent of the general student population. At USC, only 279 students out of a total undergraduate enrollment of 16,024 are enrolled in the School of Public Administration.

According to Carol Rush, the manager of recruiting and admissions for the School of Public Administration, the non-profit and public management courses offered by the school teach basic personnel skills that may be beneficial for student athletes who are planning on professional athletic careers.

Besides, Rush said, "the times we offer our courses tend to go well with their practice schedule."

The structure of college athletics also may lead many academically gifted athletes who are seriously interested in earning a degree to become detached from academics.

William Gerberding, president of the University of Washington, wrote in a September 1989 editorial in The Washington Post: "Too often, there is an implicit and sometimes even explicit anti-intellectualism that undermines the possibility of these young athletes' developing a real taste for the academic life. Too many of these young people are cut off from the deeper intellectual and normal social currents of undergraduate life."

When the NCAA imposed mandatory drug testing for athletes in 1986, it did so without understanding or acknowledging that the social conditions of big-time college athletics actually may contribute to drug abuse by athletes. Several recent studies have documented the pressures and the incredible time demands that go with being a major college athlete.

One such study found that a Brigham Young University football player devoted 2,202 hours a year, or 275 eight-hour days, to his sport. A study by Stanley Eitzen and Dean Purdy estimated that college football players devote 60 hours per week and basketball players 55 hours per week during their respective seasons.

In addition to not recognizing the effect time pressures may have on student athletes and how such pressures actually may encourage drug abuse, the NCAA and university authorities are infringing upon the student athletes' personal rights by requiring mandatory drug testing. A double standard exists. There is no mandatory random drug testing, for example, for coaches, athletic directors or athletic trainers.

NCAA rules also forbid student athletes from giving their complimentary tickets to anyone except family members, relatives and fellow students. At the same time, it is common practice for coaches to receive a liberal allotment of complimentary tickets. For example, Billy Tubbs, the head basketball coach at the University of Oklahoma, receives 200 season tickets as part of his contract and sells them for $24,000.

Also, collegiate athletes cannot endorse products or engage in any commercialization of their athletic talents or name recognition. Meanwhile, coaches can engage in an incredible variety of commercial activities to supplement their incomes. Common perks include radio and television shows (worth up to $80,000), free use of a car, university-provided housing, use of university facilities for summer camps and lucrative sporting equipment endorsement contracts. For many football and basketball coaches, perks and benefits push their income well in excess of $300,000 a year.

Blaming student athletes can be seen most clearly in the NCAA's unwillingness to permit payment of even a modest monthly stipend to college athletes. Instead, college athletes are provided with a scholarship, which is said to be a free ride to a college education (which makes it sound like student athletes are the beneficiaries of generous philanthropy by universities).

The NCAA and other leaders of intercollegiate sports promote the ideal of amateurism, further preventing outright payment. The impression is conveyed that athletes are well rewarded, which serves the interests of the college sports establishment, when, in reality, a college education at most public institutions can be obtained at a relatively reasonable cost.

According to the ASU Undergraduate Admissions office, the estimated cost of off-campus room and board for the 1990-91 academic year is $4,580. The state waives tuition fees for athletes at ASU, UofA and NAU.

College sports are big business. In a book entitled "Athletes for Sale" written by Ken Dealinger and Leonard Shapiro, Don Canham, former director of athletics at the University of Michigan, was quoted as saying: "This is a business, a big business. Anyone who hasn't figured that out yet is a damned fool."

Many major universities, including ASU, have athletic budgets of more than $13 million. This year's football bowl games will generate $60 million for competing teams. At its August meetings, the NCAA Executive Committee approved a record $160.6 million general operating budget for the 1990-91 fiscal year.

Several meaningful, positive changes actually may be in the works for intercollegiate athletics. These changes actually may represent a step toward truly protecting student athletes and correcting structural deficiencies in collegiate athletic programs.

Legislation the NCAA Presidents Commission will sponsor at the 1991 Convention in January specifies that college athletes cannot be required to spend more than 20 hours a week on sports and guarantees them at least one day a week off during their season. The 20-hour week includes team meetings (but not physical therapy) and allows three hours for games.

In addition to reducing the time demands on college athletes, an emphasis on education must be restored.

Individualized education programs should be established for student athletes and placed on file with the NCAA and the university's vice president for academic affairs. These programs would include a listing of career goals, the courses needed to achieve those goals and any remedial work that may be required.

Athletic academic advisement also should be transferred out of athletic departments. The University of Georgia took this bold step after a former professor, Jan Kemp, filed a lawsuit to try to regain her job. She claimed she was fired because she failed to find academic loopholes for athletes.

Tying the allotment of athletic scholarships to graduation rates would only create further problems. Although more athletes would graduate, selected majors would be identified for clustering and severe pressures placed on professors who teach in those majors.

Clearly, the NCAA and other athletic authorities claim they are attempting to solve the problems of big-time college athletics, but they need to address aggressively the causes of corruption, cheating and unethical behavior. By blaming primarily the student-athletes and aiming the most punitive regulations toward them, these authorities have ignored their responsibility for treating student athletes as equal members of an undeniably commercial enterprise.

The greasy look Dirtiness next to sexiness according to style guru

Mike Royko

"Timing is everything," Slats Grobnik said.

Don't worry, this joint doesn't close till 2 a.m.

"I wasn't talking about that. I mean trends and fashions. You and me, we're way ahead of our times as trendy guys."

Us? Trendy?

"Sure. You remember when we were punks, what we put on our hair before we combed it?"

Yes, I remember it with great disgust. I was partial to brilliantine and the oily look and, as I recall, you used axle grease from Piotrowski's gas station and garage.

"Nah, I used pure petroleum jelly from the drug store. Boy, one glob of that stuff and my hair would have stayed in place in a tornado. And you remember how often we used to wash our hair?"

As often as we washed the rest of ourselves, which was once a week.

"That's right. The regular Saturday bath, whether we needed one or not. Of course, if it was a hot summer, and we played four or five softball games on a dusty diamond, I used to wash my feet on Wednesday night."

You always were a fastidious lad.

"Yeah, but not our hair. We put that stuff on our heads every day, and it just kind of built up, layer after layer of goop. I remember once a bat flew into my hair. Died on instant contact."

What has provoked these raunchy memories?

"Because I happened to be reading a Wall Street Journal that somebody left on the bar, and there was a story in it about how the real trendy thing out in L. A. and in New York is to have a real greasy, dirty hair look. There are movie stars that have stopped washing their hair, and some of the fancy hair joints are fixing people so that they look greasier and dirtier than when they came in. They even sell stuff that gives you an instant, greasy look."

Why would anybody want their hair to look greasy and dirty?

"Well, we used to, didn't we?"

No. We didn't know any better. We thought we looked cool. And because nobody in the neighborhood had showers, washing our hair meant sticking our heads in the kitchen sink, which could be uncomfortable if there were pots and pans in there.

"Yeah, I guess so. But now its considered sexy."

To look like a slob?

"Sure. Here, lemme read you what this big-time hairdresser out there says. Guy by the name of Victor Vidal."

I wonder why hairdressers always have names like Victor Vidal. Why aren't they ever named Horace Glotz or Bruno Zankowski?

"Because those are barbers' names. If you're a barber, you can be a Bruno Zankowski. If you're a hairdresser, you got to be a Victor Vidal. Don't you know nothing about show biz?"

I guess not. So what did he say?

"He says: 'The whole look is eroticism. It's very animalistic. It's aggressive. That's the whole purpose of not washing the hair so much. You are allowing yourself to secrete your own oils.' How do ya like that, huh? Way back when, you and me had the eroticism look. We were animalistic."

You may be right. I remember the time a gym teacher told us we smelled like a couple of skunks, so that's animalistic.

"Nah, what that means is that we must of had that natural, sexy, animal quality like Marlon Brando had in 'Streetcar Named Desire.'"

Then why was it that when we asked the girls for dates, they called us geeks and greaseballs?

"Because the babes in our neighborhood didn't have no sense of style. They didn't recognize that we were wild and trendy guys secreting our own oils and being animalistic. That's why they all ended up marrying yahoos and now they got thick ankles and blue veins. Hah! The laugh's on them."

I shall find it hard to believe that anyone would choose to have hair that looks like it was dipped in a crankcase. And that a female would find it appealing.

"It must be so. I guess if you got the look, the doll will say: 'Oh, your hair looks so oily and animalistic, as if you are secreting your own oils. And the smell. My, it's as if a mouse died in it. May I run my fingers through it? Wait, I'll fetch a surgical glove.'"

But what about cooties? If you don't wash your hair, the little buggers breed and thrive on your noggin.

"I don't know. Maybe that's even a bigger turn-on. Maybe the women say: 'Oh, your head is just teeming with wildlife. Take me, you animal, I'm yours.'"

I hope this doesn't mean you're tempted to give this trend a try.

"I'll tell you the truth: I did. I went out and got some of the old clear jelly and rubbed it all over the top of my head. Then I asked my wife what she thought."

What did she think?

"She said she thought I needed a new style hat to go with my new style head, and she went out and bought it for me."

What kind of hat?

"A bowling bag."

WASHINGTON — Are the Dutch insane or is American society simply too puritanical?

In case you haven't heard the news, amendments to Holland's public morality laws were approved the other day, allowing sexual intercourse to take place among consenting Dutch girls and boys, between the ages of 12 and 16, unless the youngsters, their parents or a local Council for Child Protection file an official complaint. Previously, teens under 16 could be prosecuted for having sex in Netherlands.

Supporters of the controversial measure say the new law is long overdue. "Up until now young people under 16 who wanted to have sex with each other did it anyway, despite their parents' views and the risk of prosecution," explains Mrs. Willy Swidens, the Labor party representative who piloted the bill through Holland's Lower House. "We wanted to remove the element of guilt and secrecy to say that it is their own choice."

Of course, the Dutch think changing the age of consent from 16 to 12 is no big deal. Remember, this is the land where they legalized the sale and use of soft drugs, have gone further than any other country in promoting and accepting homosexuality and are known to be pioneers in sexual equality. The Dutch think their latest attempt to keep pace with the times is reflective in the fact that young people grow up faster and earlier than ever before. By permitting them to have sexual relations with one another, if both parties choose to do so, the government is affirming the ultimate freedom of choice.

Far from viewing this act as one that reduces children's rights, the Dutch see this law as protecting young adults. Under the new law, if a young teen has sex against their free will, they are empowered to lodge an official complaint up to 12 years after the event, once they feel confident about going to the police. Before, such grieved teens were unable to file any charges against sexual aggressors.

Dutch social scientists do not expect the new law, which takes effect in two years, to alter the social behavior of the young. According to research by the Netherlands Institute for Social and Sexual Research, only six percent of all 14-year-olds ever admitted to engaging in sexual relations. By 16, the figure rises to 17 percent; by 17.4 years to 50 percent.

Still the questions persist if it is wise to place the onus of consent on children so young. While legalizing sexual intercourse where there is free will sounds cool, are 12-year-olds mature enough to decide consciously whether they want a full sexual relationship? Should children be given full freedom in the field of sex? Don't kids need space and freedom to develop first?

Anyone who has a young teen knows that in one instance they can seem quite sophisticated. But are they permitted to be a little child again when they need to? Don't parents have a right to know if their pubescent kids are having sex? Under this new law, won't kids think it's uncool to refuse sex?

On one level, it seems obvious that permitting sexual intercourse between young teens is a corrupting influence. It would most certainly be the case among similarly aged young Americans, since their European brethren often mature before they do.

The Dutch, however, have a rather high opinion of their young people. Recently a law was passed in Holland enabling children under 12 to choose which parent they wanted to live with in divorce cases.

As uneasy as I suspect Holland's new age of consent must make most American parents feel, one fact can't be ignored. There is an extremely low incidence of pregnancy in the Netherlands, which suggests that young people there are well-informed and responsible about contraception. Dutch sex education is far in advance of ours and contraception more readily available. One can easily conclude that Dutch 12-year-olds have a better idea of what they are consenting to than their American peers.

Maybe the Dutch have some lessons for us. After all, it is not as if sexual activity among teenage girls is decreasing in this country. In fact, just the opposite is occurring. A study at the Alan Guttmacher Institute has found that the percentage of girls, ages 15 to 19, who reported having sex increased from 47.1 percent in 1982 to 53.2 percent in 1988.

The largest bulge in sexual activity, say the study's authors, was among white middle-income girls. The good news, however, is that the domestic teenage-pregnancy rate during the past decade has remained unchanged, at about 127 per 1,000 teenagers. This is still not much of a record to boast about.

While I'm sure many of my liberal friends must be saying that the U. S. should keep pace with the times and emulate the Dutch model regulating sexual behavior, this new legislation could well be an instance in which law gets ahead of society. Ten years from now the unresearched effects of this measure may be more distressing than otherwise. I hope I'm wrong.

Angry about rally

Editor:

On Tuesday, Nov. 20, I attended the last half-hour or so of the Martin Luther King Day rally in the M. U., and I grew angry.

Now, I support a Human Rights Day, and I look on King as a hero. Whatever faults he had in his personal life, he stood for human rights for every person, a concept that I believe has no flaws.

And although I am less than thrilled with the NFL's actions before and after the election, I can understand them.

And although we already have a state holiday honoring civil rights, and I have trouble understanding why we need a paid state holiday that would only benefit state employees (a fraction of the Arizona population), I still voted for and still support

Proposition 302.

No, I am not angry because of the deification of a man who was only human; not because of economic blackmail; not even because of all the people who oppose the holiday because, although they won't admit it, they are narrow-minded, racist, sexist, bigoted rednecked bastards. Unfortunately, these people are all too common in Arizona, my adopted home state.

What really gets my goat, and what I think even Dr. King would find incredibly ironic, is the fact that so many people are getting mad and uniting to support a holiday that is a symbol for human rights, yet I cannot remember this kind of emotion or unity in support of the ideas and ideals that the holiday symbolizes. Dr. King never fought for another day off from work, whatever the reason! He worked twice as hard for the very things this holiday is supposed to represent. I hear all these people talking about fighting, fighting, fighting for a holiday — and don't get me wrong, I believe their intentions are great — but why aren't they concentrating their efforts on fighting for human rights themselves? Symbols are all very well and good, but they are only symbols. The American flag and the Nazi swastika in and of themselves have never been of great consequence. It is not until you realize the beliefs behind these symbols that they are fully appreciated.

The same is true with King. We must fight for equality among all people, peace in the world, and true justice. Lofty, you say? Damn right! But these were the things that King was fighting for. These are the things that are represented by the holiday people of this state are struggling with. Until we begin fighting for Dr. King's beliefs, any holiday honoring him (or them) is a farce, and a stain on this great man.

WAKE UP ASU! WAKE UP ARIZONA! Stop giving speeches. Why don't you listen to some of Dr. King's? You just might learn something.

Architecture professor, administrator dies

By JENNIFER FRANKLIN
State Press

Friends and colleagues of an ASU architecture professor who died last week will pay their final respects inside a church of his design.

Rushia Fellows, 65, died Friday at Desert Samaritan Hospital in Phoenix. The cause of death has not been determined.

Fellows, who designed more than 50 buildings in Phoenix, taught an architectural design class this semester and was coordinator for the College of Architecture's minority recruitment and retainment program.

Fellows designed several Valley community centers and churches, including his own church, Shiloh Baptist Church in Phoenix, where he was a deacon.

"Those buildings will be his legacy," his youngest son, Darvis, said.

Funeral services will be held at 10 a.m. Friday in Shiloh Baptist Church.

Darvis said that as a black architect, his father was committed to getting minorities educated in every aspect of architecture.

"He wanted to have quality minority students for the future," he said. "Architecture was his life since he was 13 years old."

University co-workers said they will miss Fellows' wry sense of humor and kindness.

"Rushia Fellows was a man of great integrity and personal dignity. He conducted himself in all of his dealings with grace," said John Meunier, dean of the College of Architecture and Environmental Design. "He saw the world for what it was.

His humor had a delightful sort of deceptive edge. We will miss him."

Meunier said Fellows was a great advocate for the college and was successful in his work as a recruiter.

Fellows has worked as a professor and administrator at ASU since 1974.

He graduated with an associate's degree from Phoenix College in 1948 and a bachelor's of science degree in Industrial Technology and Architectural Studies from ASU in 1951. In 1985, Fellows completed his master's degree in Architectural Science at UofA.

Fellows received an outstanding service award from the Central Arizona Chapter of the American Institute of Architects and commendation for distinguished service

Officials to debate feasibility of airport expansion

By MICHELLE ROBERTS
State Press

Tempe City Council members will consider a revised resolution Thursday supporting a regional airport that officials hope will lessen airport noise in the skies over the East Valley.

City officials requested the revised resolution to omit endorsement of a third runway at Sky Harbor Airport.

"The third runway will have a devastating impact on Tempe," Randy Gross, assistant to Mayor Harry Mitchell, said.

Gross added that the revised resolution "basically calls for the state to study the feasibility of a new airport."

A few weeks ago, the city council turned down a resolution by the Arizona Partnership for Air Transportation that included plans for a third runway at Sky Harbor. Council members said they fear the new runway would increase noise levels over Tempe and would not be in the best economic interests of the state.

If Tempe passes the resolution, it will be given to APAT in an attempt to urge the new state Legislature and governor to pursue a regional airport, instead of a third runway at Sky Harbor.

If the state approves plans for a new regional airport, possible sites include Casa Grande, an area between Phoenix and Tucson or the Gila River Indian Community, located south of Phoenix.

Gross said he doesn't think there will be sufficient capacity at Sky Harbor — even with a third runway — to meet future aviation demands.

"Sky Harbor wants to build a third runway to increase capacity for the airport," he said. "We (Tempe officials) feel new capacity increases should occur at a new airport."

Gross said a Tempe study indicated a new regional airport would cost $3 to $5 billion to build. He said it would be better for the state to invest this, rather than $60 million to build a third runway at Sky Harbor.

Gross said if a regional airport eventually was approved by the state, complete operation could be possible within 5 to 10 years.

Councilwoman Pat Hatton said the city will focus on a study of the effects of airport expansion at Thursday's meeting.

"The study addresses the noise," Hatton said, adding that economics are a concern for council members.

"Our study says that if the state is going continue with economic growth, then we need more capacity than Sky Harbor has to offer," she said.

However, not everyone agrees that a regional airport is the way to go.

Dutch Bertholf, Sky Harbor Aviation Director, said a regional airport is not economically feasible or convenient for the public.

"(Economically), the third runway will be cheaper — and we don't even know if (the state) could build (a regional airport) environmentally," Bertholf said.

Before airport facilities can be built or expanded, they must pass regulations imposed by the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, which requires public airports to examine how their operation affects the environment.

Bertholf said the proposed third runway is part of a master plan for expansion designed to lessen delays expected to arise from airport expansion projects.

If construction of a third runway is approved, it likely would be built between 1993 and 1997, and could service Valley aviation needs beyond the year 2007, Bertholf said.

He also said a regional airport will be an inconvenience for travelers because its location possibilities are not centralized.

Bertholf added that Sky Harbor officials are doing all they can to work with Tempe to curb airport noise.

"The airport does create noise, but the city of Tempe and Phoenix have gotten together to do a study to reduce noise," he said.

Altogether, nine votes on the 15-member council are needed to approve the resolution. It is supported by at least six of the non-permanent council members: Canada, Finland, Romania, Ivory Coast, Zaire and Ethiopia.

Yemen, the council's only Arab member, is believed likely to abstain or vote against it.

Malaysia and Colombia's votes are uncertain. Colombian foreign minister Luis Jaramillo said Tuesday that Colombia still has not decided how to vote, but would prefer a diplomatic solution.

Cuban Ambassador Ricardo Alarcon has said his country could not support the resolution. The Soviet Union sent a high-ranking envoy to Cuba, a longtime client state, for talks on Tuesday in advance of the vote.

Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev also held talks in Moscow Tuesday with Saudi Arabia's foreign minister, Prince Saud al-Faisal, and said both sides agreed the U. N. measure would promote a "just resolution" of the gulf crisis.

In Washington, the Senate Armed Services Committee opened four days of hearings on President Bush's gulf policy.

The hearings were prompted by Bush's decision earlier this month to send more troops and build an "offensive military option" with a force that will total about 430,000 in the region by January. The panel's chairman, Sam Nunn, said the buildup raises serious questions.

"Is it in our vital interest to liberate Kuwait? How long can we sustain more than 400,000 troops? Has President Bush limited his options by creating a use-it-or-lose-it situation?" the Georgia Democrat asked.

"It is not enough for President Bush to go to the United Nations to get approval for the use of military force in the Persian Gulf," said Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., a member of the committee. "He must also come to Congress."

Pentagon spokesman Pete Williams, outlining new U. S. estimates of Iraqi troop strength, said half of Iraq's estimated 450,000 troops in the theater of operations — southern Iraq and Kuwait — are inside Kuwait itself. The troops are mainly defensive in nature, but "have the ability to go on the offensive" if necessary, he said.

resign last week after she was unable to put down Heseltine's challenge.

She said she resigned to let someone from the Cabinet stand against Heseltine. Major and Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd both joined the race, but before the vote her aides spread the word that she was backing Major.

The son of a circus performer and at one time a welfare recipient, Major personifies the values of self-reliance and hard work that Thatcher had preached to the nation.

His election climaxed a month of British politics-turned-upside down, and the Western world's longest-serving head of government was driven from office by a revolt in party ranks.

Heading a government that was trailing the opposition Labor Party in the polls and suffering a losing streak in local Parliamentary elections, Thatcher lost control of events after her deputy, Sir Geoffrey Howe, resigned on Nov. 1.

Howe, the fourth Cabinet member to resign because of disputes over policy toward the European Community, shocked the House of Commons on Nov. 13 by calling Thatcher a threat to Britain's vital interests.

The next day, Heseltine announced he would challenge her. Six days later, with Thatcher at a 34-nation summit in Paris officially ending the Cold War, Heseltine polled enough votes to deny her re-election as leader.

Two days later, she decided to resign after party leaders told her she could not win.

Heseltine, 57, said Major's election "lays the basis for the unity of our party."

responsive, they said, adding that the document did not represent the students' best interests.

In response, the committee members prepared an alternate draft and submitted the proposal to Burton.

Burton's second draft, which was distributed to committee members on Nov. 9, failed to address many of these concerns, members said.

The committee met Tuesday evening in hopes of reaching a consensus.

After nearly two hours of sometimes heated debate, the panel reached consensus on the following recommendations:

- Student Affairs should maintain a coordinated calendar on types of events, timing of events and location of events.

- General revenues from non-student, non-faculty and staff commercial activities should be deposited centrally and recommendations for expenditure be made to Coor by the Budget Council. A campus use fee should be assessed to commercial vendors' activities and controlled centrally.

- The University should discuss with newspaper publishers the possibility of using a common rack.

- ASU should add more kiosks in campus areas, particularly by the Student Recreation Complex.

- Officials should identify a reasonable number of locations for commercial activities and then limit their time on campus, charging a fee to activities other than student-, faculty- and staff-sponsored revenue-generating ventures.

This should be accomplished in conjunction with a reasonable time, place and manner policy for safety purposes. Revenue collected from fees would be deposited into the student financial aid trust fund.

- The University should develop a plan to upgrade all temporary carts.

However, the committee was still divided over whether ASU should charge a rental fee for tables and chairs supplied to certain vendors.

McCune said money is already allocated for the maintenance and distribution of the materials.

"There is no additional need to charge for it," he said. "We would be paying for it twice. The proposal needs to be eliminated."

Burton has contended that failure to charge for the materials would not be an optimum use of resources.

A third mall appearance draft incorporating new ideas will be distributed within the week, Burton said, adding that the committee will meet to iron out remaining differences.

During Tuesday's meeting, the committee overwhelmingly shot down two of Burton's suggestions as unfair to students and unenforceable.

One proposal would have charged responsible agencies a clean-up and removal fee for unauthorized postings. Another plan would have required all commercial users to identify gross sales and report net revenues to ASU.

Lowell Crary, associate vice president of Student Affairs, said the committee's proposals to date adequately represent the student interests, adding that the meeting's events do not represent any wholesale change.

"I'm pleased," Crary said. "I don't think you could point to any one thing and say it will make a difference."

Coordinator

Tuesday, Senate members joked about the trouble they had getting someone to fill the post, as evidenced in ASASU College of Law Sen. David Jordan's mock questioning.

"You're in Delta Sigma Pi sorority, is that correct?" he asked, as Shelly nodded. "Frank McCune's not in your sorority, is he?"

Despite the two-month delay, former elections coordinator Boley, who attended Tuesday's confirmation, said the "wasted time" should not hinder Shelly this year.

"She's got so much experience and so much knowledge about the elections process," Boley said, referring to the two previous elections that Shelly has worked on as a volunteer. "There's a lot she can just walk in to."

Shelly, a 22-year-old accounting senior, said one of her biggest obstacles this year will be dealing with write-in candidates, an issue that Boley received criticism for from both candidates and voters last spring.

Although the ASASU constitution allows write-ins, its bylaws do not provide rules or procedures for handling such votes.

In addition, Shelly said she plans to publicize the elections more thoroughly this year, stressing that the entire voting process should take no more than two minutes.

Although the election is still months away, Shelly said her job begins now.

"It's a big job," she said. "There's a lot of planning and a lot of things that need to be set into place."

Liddy, Leary set for lecture series debate

By JENNIFER FRANKLIN
State Press

A convicted Watergate conspirator and a 60's drug guru will go head to head tonight, debating politics, drugs and the responsibility of individuals in society.

G. Gordon Liddy and Timothy Leary will debate "The State of the Mind vs. The Mind of the State" at 7 p.m. in the MU's Arizona Room.

In a prepared statement, Liddy said society can become ethical only when individuals are willing to give up some rights to the government. Leary has said he believes the individual must be protected from the "tyranny of the majority."

Chris Kieselbach, director of the ASASU Lecture Series, which is sponsoring the event, said she expects the debate to draw a significant crowd.

"There is room in the Arizona Room for 600 people, and then there is a room we can open next to it for overflow," she said.

This will not be a first visit to ASU for either debator. Liddy spoke on campus in 1987, and Leary spoke last spring.

"We've had many requests to bring them back," Kieselbach said.

As assistant district attorney, Liddy led raids on Leary, an LSD researcher who was considered the leader of the 60's psychedelic movement.

But Liddy is best known for his role in the Watergate scandal. He served as the general counsel for the Committee to Re-Elect the President when Richard Nixon ran for a second term.

Liddy was sentenced to 21 years in a maximum security prison for his role in the scandal. He served nearly five years.

In 1959, Leary was hired as a professor at Harvard University, becoming director of the Harvard Psychedelic Research Project, a clinical study on the effects of psychedelic drugs.

After he was fired from Harvard in 1963, Leary established a new research center, which was raided by police under orders from Liddy.

In 1970, Leary was charged with possession of marijuana and convicted. He escaped from prison and was granted political asylum in Algeria and Switzerland.

Later, he was captured by DEA agents in Afghanistan and extradited back to the United States. He was paroled in 1976.

In addition to traveling the lecture circuit, Liddy owns an industrial security company.

Leary is the president of Futique, Inc., a company that designs software programs for personal computers.

Kids Voting program successfully draws adult voters

By JOHN CHAMPION
State Press

The Kids Voting program instituted in the November election to teach children the elections process helped draw an estimated 35,000 additional adult voters to the polls, an ASU professor said.

"The program went overwhelmingly well," said Bruce Merrill, director of the media research program for the Walter Cronkite School of Journalism and Telecommunications. "The program turned out an additional 3 percent of the voters who would not have gone to the polls."

Merrill went on to say the Kids Voting program was approved of by about 84 percent of the more than 600 parents surveyed by his department for the Kids Voting program. Ninety-six percent of those parents want the program to be continued, he said, adding that about 77 percent of the parents surveyed reported their children asked questions and initiated discussions about political candidates or issues during the general election.

Over 130,000 children statewide took part in the program.

Bob Evans, chairman of the Kids Voting program, said the project was a success, adding that he would have been happy with about 80,000 children participating.

"The intensity in thinking about the issues and talking them over with their parents went beyond what we had expected," he said. "We've just begun to realize that our children are more intelligent than we are giving them credit for."

Evans said he hopes children involved will continue to exercise their right to vote when they become adults, adding that he thinks Kids Voting will educate the educators about children's intelligence.

"Our education system doesn't eliminate nor help the apathy that we find today," he said. "It seems in recent years that our educational system is conducive to apathy towards voting and doesn't instill that type of responsibility in kindergarten through high school."

administrative processes and I'm not going to do that," Gray testified. "He said they were there for their friend at Lincoln."

Gray said, "We did not succumb to that pressure" and the risky-investment rule was not withdrawn. "Nothing was speeded up . . . nothing was slowed down" in the Lincoln investigation as a result of the senators' intervention, he said.

Gray testified he did not protest to the senators after the alleged deal was offered because he feared they would not back legislation to provide money-raising authority for the hard-pressed Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Fund.

Gray was responsible for the fund as chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

Calm under direct examination from special counsel Robert Bennett, the witness whose testimony is crucial to the case not only insisted that DeConcini offered the deal, but added: "Every time he said anything, he said 'We.' I assumed he was speaking for" Cranston, Glenn and McCain.

While Riegle was not at that meeting, Gray said the Michigan Democrat was instrumental in organizing it — something that Riegle, the Senate Banking Committee chairman has denied.

Gray said that on March 6, 1987, Riegle told him, "You know there are senators out West who are very unhappy about the bank board's regulation of Lincoln and you ought to talk to them."

Gray said he resisted, because he thought the matter was simply a continuation of Keating accusations that the chief thrift regulator was out to get Lincoln. Despite that protest, Gray said, Riegle told him, "I think you'll be getting a call."

The ex-regulator said he was shocked when he learned that Riegle was at a meeting April 9, 1987, between all five senators and the San Francisco-based regulators who were examining Lincoln.

Clara Moore, an academic adviser in the University Advising Center, described him as a "gentle man" who was intelligent, articulate and easy to work with.

"It's going to be rough to replace such a fine person," Moore said.

Moore said that while Fellows was proud, "he never took anybody on the ego trip" and "his warmth always came through."

Fellows' younger son, Daryl, said his father enjoyed working with his students and speaking at high schools and grade schools.

Fellows is survived by his wife Alice, sons

Three new ways to survive college.

The Macintosh Classic

The Macintosh LC

The Macintosh IIfx

With Apple's introduction of three new Macintosh® computers, meeting the challenges of college life just got a whole lot easier. Because now, everybody can afford a Macintosh.

The Macintosh Classic is our most affordable model, yet it comes with everything you need—including a hard disk drive. The Macintosh LC combines color capabilities with affordability. And the Macintosh IIfx is perfect for students who need a computer with extra power and expandability.

No matter which Macintosh you choose, you'll have a computer that lightens your work load without giving you another tough subject to learn. Every Macintosh computer is easy to set up and even easier to master. And when you've learned one program, you're well on your way to learning them all. That's because thousands of available programs all work in the same, consistent manner. You can even share information with someone who uses a different type of computer—thanks to Apple's versatile SuperDrive™, which reads from and writes to Macintosh, MS-DOS, OS/2, and Apple® II floppy disks.

See the new Macintosh computers for yourself, and find out how surviving college just got a whole lot easier.

Not only are they young and totally obsessed with sex, but the ColorMen like to hang out with Pat Boone

By MARK JAS. TYNAN
State Press

Check this out — the opening act for Pat Boone was hot! It's true, you have to believe me.

Canadian pop a capella masters, ColorMen, warmed up Sunday evening's audience before headliners Pat Boone and Florence Henderson took the stage at Gammage Auditorium.

The ColorMen concede that the tour is great from a financial standpoint, however, it is also somewhat frustrating for these four vocalists who are, as Rupert Grant puts it, "young and totally obsessed with sex."

The present lineup of the vocal quartet, formerly known as the Melloyds, have been working together since spring 1986. They are Rupert Grant, Cam Grant, Tim Fuller and Michael Viens. The group is using its old name for most of their tour with Boone simply because the name change came after the tour had been booked and publicized.

The ColorMen were truly steaming Sunday night. The audience was not exactly their type of crowd but for the few audience members that have yet to reach retirement, these four guys saved the day.

Sunday's performance was the opening date of a four-week tour with Boone that will take ColorMen through Illinois, New York, Ohio, Wisconsin, Florida and California. They flew out to Indianapolis early Monday morning for a concert at Ball State University.

ColorMen started out as the Melloyds at Vancouver Community College in British Columbia, Canada. Two of the members are Rupert Grant and Cam Grant (no relation), who, coincidentally, went to the same high school. All four of the members did most of their growing up in the Vancouver area.

They started out singing 50's, 60's and jazz standards and this is where the quartet's initial renown came. They sang at school events, did local gigs, and, eventually, national level concerts and festivals.

It was at this point that I first heard these four guys from Vancouver singing up a storm. ColorMen sang at MusicFest Canada '87 in Ottawa, Ontario.

Viens assured me that a lot has changed since then. The ColorMen have made several key alterations, not the least of which is the name change.

The group is striving for more of a popular sound, leaving behind the somewhat nostalgic format of the past. Viens says, "(we are) more driving and high energy. Our style is (still) based in the 50's and 60's, but we give it a 90's flavor. We have sort of coined the phrase for our music . . . we call it 'A Capella NuBop'. Its got some funk, some rap, and some rock."

The name change stems from several factors. The members wanted to break away from the old "soft pop" image and create a progressive sound with more edge and top 40 potential. Also, the record company they presently have a multi-record deal (Attic Records) wanted them to get a new name. Everyone essentially agreed that the old name did not fit the new image.

The format changes are all a part of the vocalists searching for their musical niche in today's highly competitive music industry. The ColorMen of today hope to offer more of an entertainment factor and subsequently be successful in the pop market.

Viens describes the musical adventures leading to their present format as "a spontaneous combustion." The group has just done whatever came naturally, experimenting with styles and format until they found out what they really liked. The combustion continues, but the ColorMen have basically found their home musically and now it is just a matter of settling into their niche.

The recently acquired multi-record contract with Attic Records of Canada is, as Viens says, "a good step." It is not a major label, but it is definitely a step closer to the real thing.

The first album, recorded in September of this year, is a Christmas compilation entitled "Open Before Christmas". There are two traditional carols and seven original compositions on the recording. They take advantage of multi-tracking of voices and use a tiny bit of background percussion that, as Viens says, "sounds like a drum machine."

The ColorMen took advantage of other forms of percussion on their first album as well. Viens says, "All these percussive sounds were made with our voices and our bodies . . . we took a chest of Rupert, a beat off me. . ." The chest sounds like a conga drum and is used on at least two cuts on the recording: "Star of Heaven" and "Birth of the Baby Boy," both original compositions.

The first album was as Cam Grant says, "thrown together." The new image will not be completely presented until the release of their second recording, to be released late next summer. It will enclose the driving popular style of music that the ColorMen have been striving for. Viens says, "We really want to do it all . . . definitely more than one top 40 . . . and maybe a club (dance) mix."

Boone first discovered the ColorMen in Vancouver during the Christmas of 1987. They were singing on a local telethon. Boone was a headliner at the event. A technician raced to their dressing room with the music to a 50's medley Boone had decided he wanted to sing.

Viens says, "the guy told us that Pat Boone wanted to do a 50's medley, showed us the music, and asked if we could make the tune. We sorta looked at each other like 'ya, no problem.' Then he said, 'Okay, you'll be on stage in half an hour.' It went really good and he (Boone) liked us."

On-the-spot arrangements and composition are part of the job description for the quartet. It is really amazing how easily they can create their musical works of art. Cam Grant says, "People really give us too much credit . . . we just do what's natural (for us)."

Their natural abilities were obviously enough to win Boone's praise. Their initial acquaintance initiated a relationship with Boone that has led them up to their upcoming tour. They toured England with him in '89 and that event led to being invited to sing at an extremely prestigious vocal festival in Holland. They shared top billing with such legendary vocal virtuosi as the Swingle Singers and the King's Singers.

ColorMen's tour with Boone will entail, in an attempt to better fit in with Boone's format, a lot of soulful, lighter music. They will, thankfully, be squeezing in some of their newer format. Viens says, "We're going to try to sneak as much of it in there as we can."

'Bye Bye Blues' is more than romance

By KRAMER WETZEL
State Press

With the threat of war looming in the Middle East, perhaps a movie like "Bye Bye Blues" is even more appropriate than before. This is a tale about the casualties of war; psychological casualties, i.e., what happens at home after the war.

The opening sequences are in India and the first shots poignantly juxtapose the native Indians and the British colonials. One is wearing shoes, and the other isn't. But this isn't a film about the British Empire, provincialism or colonies.

It's about a woman who loses her husband in the Far East. By 1942, Daisy Cooper (Rebecca Jenkins) has returned home to Alberta, Canada. Her husband is probably a prisoner of war. She is uncertain of his real location and subsequent fate.

What unfolds is the story about a lady who has a God-given talent to sing. She starts out playing with a small dance band. Eventually, given the war-time economy and the milieu of the film's setting, the band and her talent carry her far along the road to success.

There are two problems with this. First of all, women are supposed to stay home and raise children. That's fine, provided there is a source of income. In Daisy's case, however, her husband is a doctor attached to the British forces and there isn't a paycheck coming in.

The second problem is the love conflict. Daisy's success is not just built upon her talent, but the capable tutelage of Max (Luke Reilly), the trombone player.

Daisy is torn between remaining faithful to a husband that might or might not be alive and the ever-present amorous advances of Max, the musician.

But there is more at stake here than simple romance. Some of the themes that are explored include a questioning look at the way women were treated at that point in history. Ugly sexism is dealt with in a fair light but also painfully accurate.

Another theme that is developed is the effect of war on the people back home. At one point Daisy's younger brother returns and he is missing part of one leg. In a few short lines, he dramatically illustrates the harsh reality of war and manages to capture some of the sentiments felt by returning soldiers. It may have been a victory, but at what price?

The scenery in Alberta is breathtaking. If it were another movie or if the crew wasn't up to the monumental task, the terrain could have been another character. But one of the absolutely most stunning aspects, aside from the rest of a seamless production, is the music. George Blonheim is the music producer, and the deceptively simple, yet evocative small dance band of the 40's era is wonderfully handled. It sounds good. To top it off, there are Max's solo trombone notes making a plaintive wail in the night, and these rich notes feel lonely. Just like Max.

Good film. Go and see how Daisy resolves her conflict. Four gold stars for this one.

In Sunday's concert the ColorMen gave a good sampling of their virtuosity without shattering Boone's rather calm format. Their rendition of Schubert's "Ave Maria" was amazing. This a capella version of Schubert's classical standard demonstrated just how versatile and talented the quartet is.

They also performed their own versions of "Joy to the World," "It Came upon a Midnight Clear," "Blue Moon" and "Sha-Boom."

The most successful a capella group today is Take 6, a religious vocal jazz sextet. They have achieved stardom and subsequently every other a capella group is going to be compared to them at one time or another. To this issue Viens says, "We're not jazz vocalists. Take 6 is great at what they do, but they're different... we're different."

Boone is quick to point out that when he discovered them in 1986, "this was before Take 6!"

As far as future plans Viens says, "We want to make it in America. The population in Canada just isn't enough to make it (big)." ColorMen would like to tour what Viens says are "soft seat halls. We don't want to be screaming to 55,000 people... nice halls with crowds of about one to 3,000. We'd really like to do the college circuit. There are a lot of schools in Canada and the States and I think we could really give them what they want."

It is near impossible to make it in the cut-throat music world, let alone achieve stardom. There is plenty of financial strain and overall hard times. Viens says, "We've had our high spots." ColorMen still have a long way to go before they attain their goals, but they are definitely going to be making some sweet music along the way.

Unfortunately, their latest disc was not distributed in the United States, due to a late release date. However, the next album is going to be available throughout the United States, distributed by A&M Records.

The ColorMen have upcoming appearances on the three most popular late night television shows hosted by David Letterman, Arsenio Hall, and Jonny Carson, respectively.

If you miss them on the tube, then when ColorMen's next recording comes out next summer, do yourself a favor — check it out.

BRISBANE, Australia (AP) — Queensland's dry hot weather is doing nothing, absolutely nothing for the love life of the state's crocodiles.

Crocodile farmer John Lever says the crocs mate once a year and depend on monsoons — due around now.

"But with the dry, dry weather we've been having, there's no stimulus at all... The crocs are all sort of lying about in anticipatory glory, they've gone off their food and they're listless, some of the males are a bit tetchy and we're all getting a bit anxious."

He said the farm's "passion" indicator, a frolicsome female nicknamed "the old tart," was stirred only faintly by a recent thunderstorm.

"She's always the first one to be switched on... but even she has hardly batted an eyelid," Lever said.

He said the croc exhibited some signs of arousal after the thunder and lightning, stretching her neck and blowing bubbles in the water, but she failed to draw any sign of interest from the males.

A heavy rain was needed, he said.

Otherwise, males could miss out on the female's peak once-a-year fertility period and the eggs would be sterile.

Like all farmers, he said, "we're really dependent on the weather."

Devils reach Nationals Bedewi, Eaton represent ASU gymnastics team

By DARREN URBAN
State Press

It was inevitable that Paul Bedewi and Geoff Eaton would be the first pair of ASU gymnasts to qualify simultaneously for the U. S. Nationals.

After all, Bedewi, a sophomore, and Eaton, a freshman, have known each other and have trained together for 11 years.

And both have blood lines in the sport — Bedewi's father was a member of the 1952 Lebanon Olympic team, and Eaton's father, Stormy, runs the Desert Devils, an all-female gymnastics club in Scottsdale.

"We work real well together," Bedewi said.

Bedewi and Eaton travel to Colorado Springs, Colo., this weekend as one of 50 qualifiers in the winter U. S. Nationals (There is also a competition in the summer). The top 18 finishers become the United States National Team.

Bedewi said his intense practice schedule over the summer, including a trip to the summer U. S. Nationals, gave him an edge in qualifying.

"This summer, I had a lot of work," Bedewi, 19, said. "You have to work two sets of compulsories (to qualify). Most do just one . . . Some guys don't want to put in the work."

Eaton, 18, was a little more blunt.

"I thought we'd both make it," he said.

"It's the first time we have taken two guys at the same time," ASU coach Don Robinson said. "We potentially will have four or five qualify next year."

Joe Barnason/State Press

Eaton and Bedewi began gymnastics seriously when both joined a male version of the Desert Devils. It was there that Robinson began tracking his future recruits.

"I've known Paul since he was born," Robinson said. "I've been able to observe them as they've progressed and I know what they can do."

Bedewi stayed close to home and finished sixth at last year's Pac-10 Championship, and also qualified for last summer's U. S. Nationals. In addition, he helped snag Eaton, a 1990 graduate of Coronado High School, for the Sun Devils. "Paul's being here definitely had an influence on me," Eaton said.

"I did a lot of recruiting (for Eaton)," Bedewi said. "I did more recruiting than the coaches."

The fact that Eaton will be going with Bedewi to Colorado gives Bedewi more confidence than he had at this summer's Nationals.

"When I went to the U. S. Nationals by myself this summer, I was overwhelmed," Bedewi said. "I was by myself and here I was looking at guys who are on the U. S. National team . . . That's the advantage we have over my trip last summer. We can keep each other calm."

Eaton's age keeps him in the 18-and-younger bracket, so even a poor showing overall may get him on a developmental U. S. squad.

"I have a good chance because I'm young," Eaton said.

Bedewi, elected co-captain by his teammates, exudes a quiet confidence.

"He's a good team man," Robinson said.

On the other hand, Eaton is somewhat cocky by his own admission.

"You need to be extremely self-confident," Eaton said.

Robinson explains it a different way.

"He's a hot dog," Robinson said. "But he gets nervous sometimes . . . Freshmen react crazy. A lot of them come in spoiled, from a situation where they're always being watched very closely."

Both Bedewi and Eaton have the National team — and the Olympics — as goals.

"I didn't think about it a lot," Bedewi said. "It's starting to get more realistic."

Bedewi added that he expects the ASU squad to be a national power this season.

"Our team is going to be great," Bedewi said. "I expect a top-three finish this year. We have a better attitude in the gym this year. Last year, we had some bad attitudes, but they aren't here anymore."

"We could win the national championship, but we'd really have to get our stuff together. Realistically, it's a top-three finish."

"We still could win a national title," Robinson said. "But we don't really have an idea what the other teams have."

Joe Barnason/State Press

Freshman Geoff Eaton practices on the pommel horse with sophomore Paul Bedewi looking on.

Eaton said if the Sun Devils can get to the final three, No. 1 is not far-fetched.

"UCLA has the best team with five guys on the national team," Eaton said. "But they don't win it. When you get to the top three, it's whoever has the best meet on the final day."

Wrestlers face struggling Sooners

By DAN ZEIGER
State Press

Although the Sun Devil wrestling team impressively raced to three victories to open the season, Coach Bobby Douglas said that there is still plenty of room for improvement.

So No. 4 ASU, fresh off wins over Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo, Cal State-Fullerton and New Mexico at the ASU quadrangular on Nov. 17, faces a little tougher test against Oklahoma tonight at 7 in the University Activity Center.

"We saw a lot of mistakes and we've worked to correct them," Douglas said. "We weren't doing a very good job on top, when we need to attack our men. We also had some work to do on finishing our takedowns. We've been working on our weaknesses, and what we saw on the films should be beneficial for us."

Tonight's match will be the first dual meet for OU, who could be in for a subpar season by Sooner standards if preseason forecasts ring true. OU's No. 31 ranking is the worst in the school's history and none of the team's wrestlers are ranked in the top 20 of their weight classes.

Although Stan Abel is the winningest coach (252-95-8) in the school's history and was inducted into the National Wrestling Hall of Fame last year, he is under pressure to win with a lineup composed of three true freshmen, two redshirt freshmen and two sophomores.

"They're young and so are we," Douglas said. "But I think we are a little bit more conditioned, although we're not as well conditioned as we've been in the past. Historically, when we have wrestled Oklahoma at home, we've done a good job against them and I hope history will repeat itself."

Sanchez

The Sun Devils are 5-0-1 in the last six meetings with the Sooners, including a 25-8 triumph in Tempe and a 26-6 victory in Norman, Okla., last season.

Douglas received good news earlier this week when preseason projected starters Marco Sanchez (134 pounds) and Andy McNaughton (142 pounds) were cleared to wrestle. The 17-year coach said although both are still in rehabilitative stages and will not be 100 percent, they are expected to start.

"(Tonight) will be Andy and Marco's first matches," Douglas said. "In first matches, anything can happen. You're not going to be sharp until you get a few matches under your belt. Marco hasn't wrestled for two years, and Andy missed the last half of last season with an injury. So, two question marks."

McNaughton, who was 14-6-1 before suffering an ankle injury last season and is currently ranked No. 9, will face redshirt freshman Ryan Schofer and Sanchez will meet sophomore William Gray.

But ASU was forced to make a change at 177 pounds, where senior Kelly Gonzalez will not compete after suffering a cut above his left eye. Filling the hole to face sophomore Kyle Scrimgeour, one of OU's two returning starters, will be senior Rob Holland, who earned his first career victory on Nov. 17.

At 158 pounds, the Sun Devils' Ray Miller injured his left knee on Nov. 17, but came back to post three victories and should be healthy enough to meet juco transfer Aaron Gaier.

One of the night's more interesting matchups should come at heavyweight, where ASU's Mike Anderson (2-1) hooks up with senior Joe O'Mara, the Sooners' other returning starter.

"(Anderson and O'Mara) are two big boys," Douglas said. "I think Anderson has made a lot of progress and we're expecting a lot of big things out of him this year."

Another close match could occur at 158 pounds, where Sun Devil freshman Gary Witherspoon (2-1) matches up against E. K. Franks, a true freshman who claimed first place at the Oklahoma Open.

But the remaining three matches could be ugly for OU as the Sooners send a trio of freshmen against three of the Sun Devils' finest:

•ASU's Shawn Charles, 3-0 and ranked fourth at 126 pounds, should have no trouble with true freshman Shawn Harrison.

•OU redshirt freshman Jason Leonard (167 pounds) will have his hands full with the Sun Devils' G. T. Taylor, 2-0 and ranked fifth.

•ASU sophomore Rex Holman, 3-0 and ranked ninth at 190 pounds, will be a decided favorite against true freshman Andy Foster.

Olympic sports signs 7 recruits

From staff reports

Sun Devil Olympic sports had a banner recruiting day Tuesday as seven prep student athletes signed letters of intent to play their respective sports and study at ASU.

Wrestling coach Bobby Douglas announced the written commitments of Steve St. John, younger brother of former Sun Devil All-American Dan St. John, and Patrick Lynch, a two-time New Jersey state champion.

"Both Steve and Patrick are considered the top recruits in their weight classes and bring outstanding credentials with them to ASU," Douglas said.

St. John of Cleveland, Ohio, captured the state title at 125 pounds in 1990 with a 35-0 record.

"Steve is an outstanding wrestling talent, who is more advanced than his brother Dan was during his high school career," Douglas said.

In addition to his state titles at 171 pounds, Lynch won the national junior Greco-Roman title in the same class. In 1989, he finished second in Greco-Roman and third in freestyle at the U. S. Junior Nationals.

ASU women's golf coach Linda Vollstedt also received two letters-of-intent Tuesday with Annie Deets of Lafayette, Ind., and Wendy Ward of San Antonio, Texas, signing.

Deets, the 1990 Indiana state high school champion, was named to the Golf Magazine prep all-America squad after

Men's golf leads in Classic

From staff reports

The top-ranked ASU men's golf team moved into first place and junior Phil Mickelson slipped to a tie for third after the second round of play Tuesday at the UNLV/Taylor Made Rebel Classic in Las Vegas, Nev.

The Sun Devils (596) posted the tournaments best round (291) to capture a four stroke lead over second place Oklahoma State (600). The Rebels (602) "A" squad is in third, six strokes back of ASU. Second-ranked North Carolina is in fourth with a three-round score of 608.

Individually, OSU's Scott Wentworth, who was tied for the lead with Mickelson following the first round, now shares the lead with UNLV's Warren Schutte. Wentworth and Schutte stand at one-over-par 145. Mickelson shares third place with teammate Scott Sullivan, who moved up from a tie for 11th place after 18 holes, and Cowboy Scott DeSerrano.

Sullivan was one of three golfers to shoot three-under 69 in the second round and junior Brett Dean shot two-under 70 to help the Sun Devils take the lead. Dean moved into eighth place after finishing in a tie for 17th after the first day of competition.

The Sun Devils are looking to card their second consecutive win and their third of the fall season as they head into the final round of action today at the Spanish Fork Country Club.

Pats, players fined in harassment case

NEW YORK (AP) — The alleged sexual harassment of reporter Lisa Olson will cost three players a total of $22,500 and the New England Patriots $50,000.

Zeke Mowatt was fined $12,500 on Tuesday, while Michael Timpson and Robert Perryman were each fined $5,000 for their roles in a locker room incident involving Olson, of the Boston Herald. The Patriots were fined $25,000 because they "never vigorously sought the facts about what had happened," NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue wrote in a letter to Patriots owner Victor Kiam.

In addition to the team fine, the Patriots were ordered to pay $25,000 for counseling on how to deal with the media.

Tagliabue levied the fines after receiving a 60-page report on the incident by special counsel Phillip Heymann of the Harvard Law School. Tagliabue concluded that "a serious incident occurred on Sept. 17 while Lisa Olson of the Boston Herald was interviewing cornerback Maurice Hurst in the Patriots' locker room. The incident involved misconduct of certain Patriots' players, which was degrading to Olson."

"Professor Heymann's report is thorough and balanced," Tagliabue said. "It treats the entire episode on a factual basis, not with speculation, rumor or rhetoric."

The report, in which 91 people were interviewed, some more than once, also said, "Lisa Olson on three occasions presented the investigators with a clear and consistent account of sexual harassment . . . The Patriots pointed out to us that various accounts written by Olson or attributed to her by other reporters were exaggerated and not entirely consistent."

"On the other hand, it was obvious to us that players were extremely reluctant to speak frankly about their own activities and those of some of their teammates. Their accounts of the incident of Sept. 17 were also often inconsistent with the accounts provided by others present in the locker room that day."

"Still, direct conflicts remain between the account of Lisa Olson and the accounts of the Patriots . . . some of these conflicts have proved unresolvable."

Olson, in a prepared statement, thanked Tagliabue and Heyman for the thorough and revealing report.

"My satisfaction with the investigation and subsequent sanctions is surpassed only by my wish the disgraceful incident had never occurred in the first place," Olson said.

Recruits

she posted eight top-10 finishes in 10 American Junior Golf Association tournaments, including two wins.

"Coach Vollstedt has the reputation as a very good motivator and she gets her players to perform to their full potential," said Deets, who ranks first in her academic class. "That's what I'm looking for."

Ward has won three junior tourney titles along with city, district and regional high school crowns.

"We are very excited about bringing in two players with such outstanding golfing and academic backgrounds," Vollstedt said. "Both Annie and Wendy are all-Americans and academic all-Americans, who we feel will fit right into our lineup next season."

Sun Devil diving coach Ward O'Connell inked a commitment from Amy Garner of Mesa Tuesday while swimming coach Ron Johnson got one from Simon Percy of New Zealand.

Garner, a Dobson High School senior, won the state 1-meter high school championship this year after winning both the 1- and 3-meter titles in 1989.

"She's determined, disciplined and dedicated and a welcome addition to any diving program in the country," O'Connell said. "Amy has an outstanding future ahead of herself."

Percy, who lives in Tempe's sister city of Nae Nae, Lower Hut, was a finalist at this year's Commonwealth Games in the 100-meter backstroke and will compete at the 1991 World Championships along with his future ASU teammates Troy Dalbey and David Holderbach. Percy is expected to perform in the individual medley and sprint freestyle as a Sun Devil.

ASU tennis coach Lou Belken rounded out the Sun Devils' recruiting crop Tuesday with a national letter of intent from Eric Brunner of Miami, Fla.

Brunner, ranked fourth in the nation among prep seniors, finished fourth at this year's Junior National Clay Court Championship and reached the final 16 of the National Junior Championship, where he was the 12th seed. He was also a finalist at last year's Florida Sectionals, a highly-regarded high school event.

"His tennis resume is outstanding and his academic achievements are equally impressive," Belken said. "He is the type of student-athlete we want to continue to have in our program."

Suns clobber undefeated Portland

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Forward Tom Chambers scored 28 points and reserve forward Eddie Johnson had 21 of his 25 in the second period as the Phoenix Suns built and blew an 18-point halftime lead before ending the previously unbeaten Portland Trail Blazers' 11-game winning streak 123-109 Tuesday night.

The win marked the first time the Suns have won in Portland since 1983.

Guard Jeff Hornacek added 17 points for Phoenix and guard Kevin Johnson, who had only three in the first half, finished with 16.

Center Kevin Duckworth and forward Jerome Kersey had 21 each for Portland, which played the entire second half without leading scorer guard Clyde Drexler, who was ejected with 3:11 left in the first half after committing a flagrant foul and then receiving a technical 24 seconds later.

Eddie Johnson's outburst in the second period included three 3-point field goals, the last giving the Suns a 63-47 lead with 4:20 left in the half. He hit seven of nine shots and was two points short of his personal high of 23 points in a quarter set in 1988.

Portland scored the first nine points of the third period to start a 19-6 spurt and guard Danny Ainge's two free throws cut the Suns' 73-55 halftime lead to 79-74 with 6:13 left.

A rebound basket by Duckworth and a driving hook by Kersey with 2:06 left made it 88-86 but Ainge hit a 3-pointer off a fastbreak with 1:39 left, giving Portland its first lead since the opening period, 89-88.

Duckworth's free throw and guard Terry Porter's layup made it 92-88 with 47 seconds left but Kevin Johnson hit five free throws to put Phoenix ahead 93-92 after three periods.

FOR THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1990

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21)
This is a good day for making progress with business interests. Money prospects improve now. Couples will be in the mood for something different in entertainment.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21)
An understanding is reached with a child. You have new inspirations for a creative project. An unusual opportunity to make money comes unexpectedly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19)
You'll catch up on reading and correspondence now. You'll have a private chat with a family member today. An adventurous mood sends you out for the evening!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18)
You'll enjoy a stimulating exchange of thoughts and reminiscences with a friend now. You'll finally get around to a project at home that you've been putting off.

PISCES (Feb. 19 to Mar. 20)
Dealings with those in high position are favored now. It's a good time to ask for a raise or to volunteer for an assignment. Social life tonight is lively.

YOU BORN TODAY are nervous, restless, and inventive. You work best when inspired and are often idealistic. You'd make a good spokesperson for a cause and often have a genuine humanitarian concern. Both business and the arts are likely to appeal to you. It is important that you remain true to your ideals and you would probably feel stifled in a routine job. You are capable of work in creative areas that is ahead of its time. Birthdate of: Louisa May Alcott, writer; Busby Berkeley, choreographer; and Adam Clayton Powell Jr., politician.
