Child care plan limits enrollment

By KEVIN SHEH
State Press

Student leaders said they are concerned about a proposal for ASU's planned on-site child care center that sets a student to faculty and staff enrollment ratio at 50-50.

"I'm mad," said ASU student Nina Bone, a mother of two. "Students got the short end of the stick again."

Students, citing figures that indicate student parents outnumber faculty and staff parents by more than three-to-one, said the ratio should be 65 percent student parents to 35 percent faculty and staff parents — a proposal turned down by ASU's On-site Child Care Task Force.

The Child Care Resources Advisory Committee, which was assigned by the task force to investigate who would use the center, unanimously supported the 65 percent student and 35 percent faculty and staff enrollment ratio.

But members of the task force — who had final say on the matter — recommended a 50 percent student-parent and 50 percent faculty- and staff-parent ratio. They claimed a greater percentage of staff would use the facility during the day, justifying the even ratio.

ASU President Lattie Coor, who was in Tokyo with the ASU football team and is unavailable for comment until Wednesday, announced plans for an on-site child care center on Aug. 30.

The center, which would be designed to serve 66 children at one time and up to 191 children aged 2 to 5 if certain flexible scheduling options were used, could cost up to $600,000 to build and $243,000 annually to operate.

Fire Extinguisher

Tempe firefighter Bill Lyall responds to a call from the Graduate Student Office in Wilson Hall Monday afternoon. Three fire trucks arrived on the scene after the fire department received reports of smoke emerging from a second story window. The fire started in a light fixture and was extinguished despite the fact that there were no working fire hydrants in the area because of a broken water line on Orange Street.

David R. Murrieta, a senior art major, was planning to graduate this May, but instead he will be leaving for Saudi Arabia this week.

"When I got the phone call, I had to take a deep breath," said Murrieta, a member of the Marine reserves Six Bulk Fuel Company. "I knew the time was coming but I didn't know it was this soon."

Bill Van Zanten, another ASU student heading for Saudi Arabia this week, said he received the call to duty the day before Thanksgiving.

"I was shocked for a while," he said. "I decided I'd better go home for the holidays."

Assistant Registrar Mary Neary said her office devised a policy at the beginning of the semester allowing students activated to duty the option of choosing incompletes for their classes or making complete withdrawals with refunds.

Of the 40 students that have contacted the office so far, the majority are taking incompletes, Neary said.

Rich Wade, acting program coordinator for Veterans Services, said the University has "points of contact," people in different areas such as the library, book store, financial aid and fee payment offices specifically designated to help students called to active duty.

"We try to do what we can to make their exit as easy and quick as possible," said Wade, adding that students have between 72 hours and a week's notice before they leave.

William "B. J." Wroten, a junior sociology major and sergeant in the Marine reserves Six Bulk Fuel Company, said he opted for incompletes in three of his classes and received a grade for one class.

Wroten said "there's compassion for the students who are going" from teachers, and he is pleased with how ASU is handling grades.

'Plain Brown Wrapper' art exhibit ain't so plain

By JULIE SIGWART
State Press

The show is introduced by the simple statement: "Notice: This exhibition contains works of pornographic, scatological, and scientific subject matters."

The images in Plain Brown Wrapper, an exhibition of works by ASU fine arts graduate student Alan McCoy, range from the Apollo moon landing to graphic depictions of sexual acts. The works are on display in the Harry Wood Gallery through Friday, Dec. 7.

Reactions from viewers at Monday's opening for the display, which included lesbian and homosexual pornography and feces floating in a commode, were mixed.

Some laughed nervously at the pictures. One mother covered her daughter's eyes.

Other observers were more open-minded.

"This is animate. It has to make you ask questions," said Gary Higgins, a senior art major. "If you don't, you must be brain-dead."

When asked about the use of sexual imagery, Higgins said that as far as he was concerned, there wasn't enough.

McCoy is presenting the show as a requirement for his master's degree.

Included in the exhibition are collograph prints, lithographs, screen prints and laser-scanned color xeroxes created by McCoy over the past three years.

When commenting about the images he used in his art and their possible offensive nature, McCoy said people viewing the display had plenty of warning.

"If you don't like what's on television, then turn it off," he said.

Bill Jenkins, associate professor of art at ASU and chairman of the committee that reviews McCoy's art, said the unusual display contains more than just the visual elements, adding that taboos are a major theme of McCoy's work.

"He shows how our taboos are the difference between violence and pornography — what is acceptable and what we are not supposed to do," he said. "Taboos represent conflict."

Expansion committee opens doors to ASU

By MICHELLE ROBERTS

State Press

The ASU master plan committee will open its doors to faculty, staff, students and neighborhood residents Wednesday in an attempt to field perspectives on how ASU can expand over the next 20 years.

A public master plan meeting is scheduled for 7 p.m. Wednesday night in Room 316 of the Business Administration Building C-Wing.

Jennus Burton, vice president for Business Affairs, said the ASU master plan is being prepared by Wallace, Roberts and Todd, a San Diego-based planning firm to assess campus circulation patterns, land use, landscaping and potential growth.

"(The master plan) is a planning process to look at the physical restraints of space at ASU," he said. "We've invited the ASU community to come to an open forum to be made aware of our master plan and give us input."

"(The master plan) is a 20-year planning horizon for ASU."

The master plan committee, made up of ASU faculty, staff, students and city officials, will host two more public meetings before the plan's completion on Feb. 12 and April 16. The plan is scheduled to be finished by August 1991.

Adrian Fontes, an Associated Students of ASU College of Education senator who serves on the master plan committee, said he thinks public input is important to the planning process.

"The concerns of the public should be well heard because the University is a very large focus of the community," Fontes said, adding that "The community should be a very large part of the University."

Fontes said "as an idea, (the plan) is the best thing that can happen to this University," but added that he is concerned about what will go into the plan.

Matthew Betz, Provost of Planning for ASU President Lattie Coor, said the master plan mainly focuses on the areas between Apache Boulevard and University Drive, and Mill Avenue and Rural Road.

Betz said the plan focuses on the campus' periphery, how ASU interacts with the community, and how ASU physically presents itself.

Betz said ASU recently has hit snags concerning campus development because the University hasn't had a master plan for about 10 years.

"We were starting to have questions about how to develop the malls and how to site new buildings — mainly the new liberal arts building," Betz said.

Betz said the master plan will guide growth for physical plant facilities, but not for a student increase.

"We aren't planning for larger student populations but are trying to accommodate the students who are now here," he said.

Jets collide, injuring 20 with 8 dead

ROMULUS, Mich. (AP) — A jetliner clipped another while preparing to take off from the Detroit airport in heavy fog Monday, igniting a fire that left one plane in smoking ruins. At least eight people were killed and 20 injured, officials said.

It was not immediately clear what caused the collision between a DC-9 and a Boeing 727-200, both operated by Northwest Airlines. A spokesman for air traffic controllers said the DC-9 appeared to have become lost on a slick, foggy taxiway and strayed into the 727's path.

For nearly an hour after the accident, smoke billowed out of the fuselage of the DC-9, where passengers apparently became trapped by the fast-moving fire. By the time the fire was extinguished, much of the plane's roof was open to the overcast sky.

Officials had initially said that 19 people were killed, but Northwest officials and Wayne County Executive Edward McNamara later said that was wrong.

McNamara said the medical examiner had "swept through the wreckage twice" and found eight bodies.

Northwest spokesman Bob Gibbons stressed that authorities were not ruling out further changes in the death toll. "This is probably going to go up or down all evening," he said shortly after 7 p.m.

The DC-9, Flight 1482 to Pittsburgh, was carrying 39 passengers and four crewmembers, according to the airline. The 727, Flight 299 to Memphis, was carrying 146 passengers.

Both flights had originated in Detroit, said Patrick McCann, a Northwest spokesman at its headquarters in Eagan, Minn.

"Apparently the right wing of the 727 hit the aft section, the engine, of the DC9, taking the engine off," said Alan Muncaster, another Northwest spokesman. "That resulted in the fire. That, at this point, is all we know."

At the time of the crash, visibility was poor and the ground was wet from a morning snow and sleet storm that delayed flights at Detroit Metropolitan Airport. Muncaster said the airport had been closed to inbound traffic but that planes were being allowed to take off.

A Northwest Airlines DC-9 burns on the runway at Detroit Metro Airport Monday afternoon after colliding in the fog with another Northwest jet.

Tony Dresden, a spokesman for the National Air Traffic Controllers Association, a union representing air traffic controllers, said there was about a quarter-mile visibility in the air, but only about 800 feet on the ground.

"We've had some discussions with our people out there," Dresden said. "The DC-9 pilot became lost on the runways. The pilot gave the ground controller erroneous information about his position and turned right onto the runway where the 727 was taxiing."

"The DC-9 pilot discovered at the very last moment where he was, and so the ground controller told him to immediately get off that runway, but it was too late."

He stressed that his information was preliminary. The Federal Aviation Administration, which supervises air traffic controllers, did not immediately comment about Dresden's statement.

Investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board were being dispatched to begin a probe aimed at determining the cause of the accident, a safety board spokesman said.

One survivor from the DC-9, 41-year-old John Izzo, said he was dozing when he "heard a bang, felt a thud and then all of a sudden, there was a blast."

"I saw the fire to the right rear. The whole top burned away, but something was definitely blown away because something flew over my head," said Izzo, a Westinghouse nuclear engineer who was returning to Pittsburgh from a

Uprising of 420 rebels in Argentina leaves 13 killed

A navy soldier tries to cover a wounded comrade Monday after rebel soldiers clashed with government troops in downtown Buenos Aires, Argentina. At least three soldiers were reported killed and five wounded.

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The military crushed a day-long uprising Monday by hundreds of rebels demanding a shake-up in the army high command. At least 13 people were killed.

The right-wing insurrection occurred two days before President Bush, in Brasilia on the first leg of a South American trip, was to visit. U. S. officials who closely monitored the situation to the south said Bush will arrive as scheduled Wednesday.

The uprising was the fourth and bloodiest in less than four years in Argentina, where democracy was restored in 1983 after nearly eight years of harsh military rule.

The rebellion collapsed Monday night after tanks surrounded army headquarters, the one remaining rebel stronghold, and the last mutineers surrendered. Warplanes earlier bombed two columns of rebel tanks.

"The triumph of the armed forces was absolute," President Carlos Menem told a news conference. "The surrender was unconditional."

About 420 rebels — soldiers and civilians — surrendered, army officials said. Others were being sought. Rebel leader Col. Enrique Baraldini was among those arrested.

Monday's rebel leaders may face the death penalty. "The military code of justice contemplates that possibility," Menem said. "The full measure of law will be applied."

Before dawn, hundreds of mutineers and armed civilians took over army headquarters in downtown Buenos Aires, two blocks from Government House; the Palermo infantry base 5 miles to the north; the Boulogne tank factory 16 miles northwest; and at least two other installations.

In contrast to three previous insurrections dating to April 1987, during Raul Alfonsin's presidency, Menem — in his 16th month of power — refused to negotiate.

"This is an attempted coup d'etat and will be treated as such," he said after declaring a state of siege.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said in Brasilia, the capital of Brazil, it seemed likely the incident was intended to embarrass Menem before Bush's visit.

"It's also the reason we want to make clear our support for democracy and President Menem," Fitzwater said.

Firefights raged all day in and near this capital of 11 million residents, capped just before nightfall by air force planes bombing rebel tanks on public roads.

Supreme Court affirms criminals' right to counsel with ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court on Monday bolstered the right of criminal suspects to have lawyers present when questioned by police. Dissenters said the 6-2 ruling needlessly shackles law enforcement and protects the guilty.

In overturning the murder conviction of Mississippi death row inmate Robert S. Minnick, the court said his confession may not be used as evidence because he was questioned without his lawyer present.

The court said that unless a previously questioned suspect asks to talk to police, they may not renew questioning in the absence of his lawyer — even after the suspect and attorney have conferred.

The high court previously had barred police from resuming the questioning of a suspect who asks to see a lawyer for the first time, unless the suspect initiates the conversation.

In other action, the court:

—Agreed to use a case from Florida to decide whether police who have an owner's permission to search a car must get a court warrant before opening any containers inside the vehicle.

—Left intact a lawsuit settlement that eased restrictions on abortion clinics in Illinois. The court, without comment, rejected arguments the settlement does not adequately protect women or fetuses.

—Refused to kill a lawsuit against California community college officials accused of unlawfully blocking the on-campus performance of a racially charged play.

—Shielded businesses from some big-money lawsuits filed by employees claiming they were fired so their employers would not have to pay pension benefits. The court ruled unanimously that fired employees may sue in federal court, but not in state courts for potentially larger punitive damages.

—Ruled by a 5-3 vote in a case from Pennsylvania and Virginia that a federal anti-counterfeiting law may be used to crack down on the sale of used cars with phony mileage readings.

The Mississippi confession case provided at least a mild surprise in that Justice Anthony Kennedy wrote the court's opinion.

All women are hussies Women-in-men's-locker-rooms debate still rages

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Syndicate

The guilty verdict is in and the big fines have been imposed, but countless Americans still believe that a woman reporter's place is not in the locker room of a professional football team.

When this furor first erupted, I received mounds of letters from men and women. The majority of them said that female sports reporters aren't really looking for news stories; they are shameless hussies who want to enter locker rooms to gaze the players' sex organs.

At first, I disagreed, saying that the players could easily resolve that dispute by donning robes or wrapping towels around around their waists. And that it was not gentlemanly for someone like Zeke Mowatt to jiggle his manly objects in front of a young woman's face.

But now I've reconsidered the entire dispute and I've decided that female reporters are wrong, and the players have been done an injustice.

What changed my mind was a conversation I had with Bubba "Norbert" Lurch, the all-pro mauler and noted thumper.

Bubba said that allowing women in the locker room is not the worst indignity that football players suffer.

"It's bad," he said, "having the girlie reporters peeking over their notebooks at my masculine adornments. But what's even worse is when we have to go in the hospital."

"As you know, a lot of us get injured playing football. And before our careers are over, the majority of us have to undergo one kind of surgery or another."

"But do you know what happens when we go into the hospital? We have to take off our clothes, that's what. And do you know who works in hospitals? Women. Just look around and you'll see that most of the nurses are women. And now you're even getting a lot of doctors who are women."

"The last time I was hospitalized, a nurse came into my room and said she had to give me a shot. I asked her where. She said in my backside."

"Well, I knew what she was up to. So I said: 'You shameless tart. You just want to do that so you can look at my magificently muscled buttocks.'"

"So she called the head nurse, who insisted that I submit to the indignity of having my nude backside scrutinized by a woman. But I told her that she was nothing but a hussy, too, and I refused. I said: 'What kind of woman are you, working in a hospital just so you can look at a man's buttocks?' She said: 'It is part of our job.' I said: 'A likely story.' And I refused to let them gawk at my bottom. They finally brought in a male doctor who gave me the shot. Of course, I made him take a oath that he wasn't gay."

"But that wasn't the end of it. When it came time for me to undergo surgery, I saw the surgical team, and it was shocking. In addition to the nurses, there was a woman doctor. She was the one who puts you under."

"I said: 'I refuse to go through with this if there are any women in the operating room.'"

"They said: 'Don't be ridiculous. Of course there will be women in the operating room. So what?'"

"And I told them: 'How am I to know that while I am under the anesthetic, totally helpless, defenseless and oblivious, that this woman doctor or the nurses will not be sneaking furtive glances, staring in wide-eyed wonder and admiration? I know the way women are and what lewd thoughts they have.'"

"Well, the doctors got upset and said:

'Look, bozo, the women are not interested in looking at your reproductive organs; they are there to do their job.'

"I said, 'Hah, I've heard that one before. That's what those female sports reporters say too. But I'm wise to all of you. The only reason you become nurses and doctors is so you can take a peek at my special purpose. For all I know, you might even bring out cameras and take pictures and then take them home and show them to your girlfriends and neighbors. You ought to be ashamed of yourselves.'

"But they stuck the needles in me, and the next thing I knew it was over and I was back in my room. And that wasn't the end of it. They kept coming in and changing the sheets and things like that. And every time they did it, they had a chance to peek at my whatsit."

"So I think it's a terrible shame. Every day there are thousands of men in hospitals, with nurses and lady doctors gawking at them. I sure wouldn't let my daughters grow up to do such lewd work. Maybe I'm just old-fashioned, but my old mom never did anything like that."

But didn't she change your diapers, Bubba?

"I forgot about that. See? You can't trust nobody."

LETTERS

List of demands

Editor:

This letter is written to clearly express our concerns regarding the coverage of cultural events in the State Press newspaper. At our last Multicultural Awareness Board coalition meeting, we discussed this matter in full, and we developed a plan to achieve the end of better representation within the State Press. This plan encompasses many new approaches to the press, and how it should increase its commitment to the promotion of cultural diversity on campus.

It came as a great disappointment to all in attendance at our last MCAB coalition meeting that State Press Editor Suzanne Ross did not accept our invitation to come hear our ideas. Your lack of attendance was felt as a slap in the face to the four coalition groups represented. If our university newspaper cannot be responsive to our input, measures must be taken to rectify this lack of representation in our newspaper.

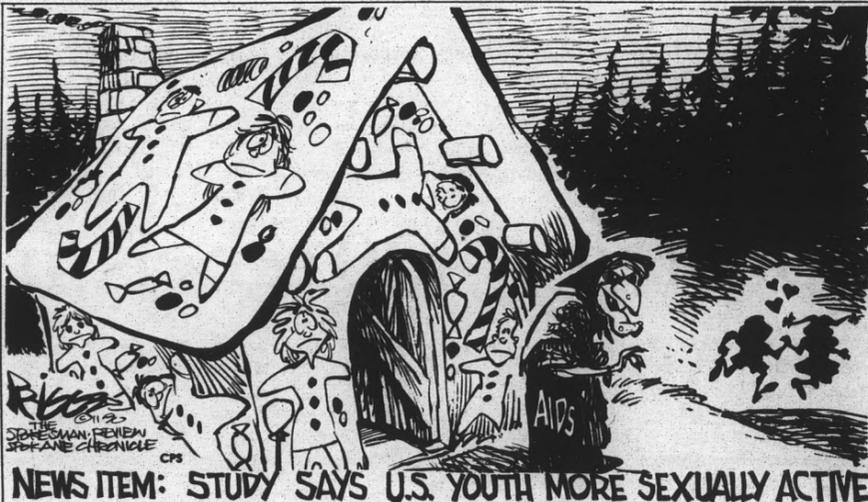

Our coalitions, united in voice and opinion, propose the following measures to solve existing shortcomings relative to coverage of cultural issues and/or events:

- 1) Underrepresented students demand a Cultural Diversity newspaper section to be

- run by four members, one from each respective underrepresented coalition;
- 2) A partial newspaper section for International Students;
- 3) We demand a more diversified State Press staff;
- 4) We demand the State Press give attention to underrepresented professors and faculty who have made major contributions to ASU in their respective research areas.

The aforementioned are our ideas and our requests. We trust the State Press and its adviser will take the proper steps to insure their implementation. The State Press is our newspaper too, but sometimes it is difficult to recognize this. We want your cooperation with this endeavor and we are ready to work with you, but we cannot and will not wait forever for your response to these requests! It was proposed and voted upon by the four coalition groups that the State Press respond formally to these requests no later than Thursday, Dec. 6, 1990.

We, as a group of concerned students, want cultural diversity to be more than a "buzz word" that administrators utilize to create good appearances, employ to win favor or newspapers espouse hypocritically. If the State Press truly believes in cultural diversity, and the promotion and celebration thereof, let us see some action and direction to back up the rhetoric. We want to be partners for progress, not adversaries for alienation. However, the ball is in your court now, for it was not your invitation that was disregarded, but ours.

We have heard the State Press is committed to cultural diversity, but, like the old saying, "talk is cheap" and actions do speak louder than words.

We look forward to your response on Thursday, Dec. 6.

Hollywood, Japan

Japanese owners may influence content of films

Cody Shearer
North American Syndicate

WASHINGTON — The Japanese admiration for American culture and property appears to know no limits. Not satisfied with being the first democracy outside the U. S. to bring Disneyland to its soil, the Japanese have now swallowed the most American of studios, MCA/Universal, which includes among its most famous assets movies like "Back To The Future," "Jaws" and "ET."

Matsushita Electrical Industrial Company, the Osaka-based consumer conglomerate that purchased MCA last week for $6.1 billion has also bought a little piece of U. S. history since MCA/Universal was the studio which transformed Ronald Reagan into an international star.

Of course, companies like Matsushita are not so sentimental that they throw down big bucks for a little nostalgia. They need to own music and film companies in order to make sure software is available for their new products.

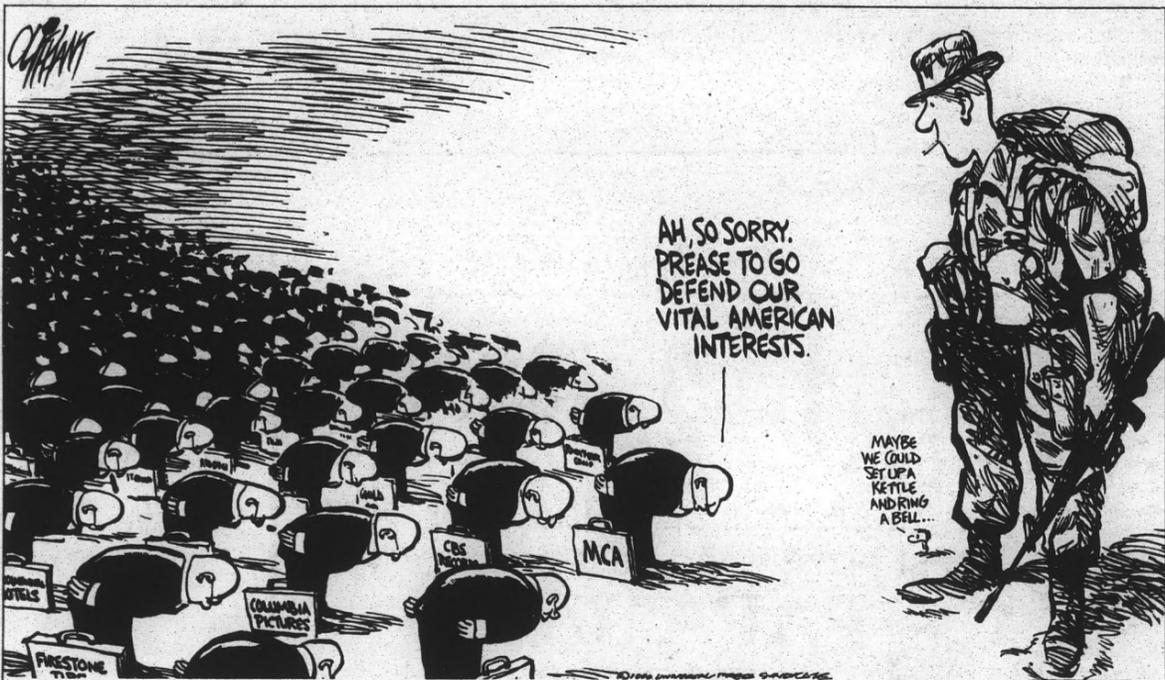

Technological developments have dramatically changed the structure of the entertainment industry. Whereas movie theaters used to account for almost all the revenue from films, new media forms — including laser discs, videocassettes, sound tracks on audio cassettes, theme parks and character-based merchandise — now brings in as much as 75 percent of industry revenue.

The sale of MCA/Universal follows the Sony Corporation's purchase last year of Columbia Pictures for $5 billion, and the same company's takeover of CBS Records in 1988. Coupled with the $1.3 billion purchase of MGM/UA property by the Italian-owned Pathe Communications Corporation and Walt Disney's recent announcement of $600 million in Japanese financing, the MCA deal means the Japanese led invasion of Hollywood is becoming a rout.

Given these most recent details, four of the seven leading Hollywood studios, representing 38 percent of last year's box office receipts, are now in foreign hands.

Should Americans be concerned by these purchases, if not others? You bet they should, but it may be too late.

First there is the issue of whether the Japanese are committed to maintaining the creative independence of artists and writers who work for MCA. There is some reason to fear, for example, that Japanese buyers of American media will be tempted to suppress anti-Japanese work. Scenes portraying the actions of Japanese troops were dropped from the Oscar-winning film "The Last Emperor."

Worries about differing social and cultural traits caused Time Warner executive Steven J. Ross to declare: "In our opinion, in the entertainment industry especially, all large parent companies from all countries should retain their national identities and their subsidiaries should be joint venture partners to ensure understanding of the cultural needs of each country."

Regardless of Japanese promises not to exert subtle political and artistic influence over movie productions, the takeover of certain cultural icons has got to be worrisome — especially when one considers that American motion pictures and television programs are ranked as one of the primary exports of this country.

It is not only movie studios that the Japanese are gobbling up either. What about real estate? Japanese investment in U. S. real estate increased 43 percent between 1988 and 1989, making the Japanese the leading foreign investor in this market. Besides Mitsubishi's purchase of Rockefeller Center last year, the Japanese have plunked down more than $900 million to buy 5,300 acres that include the Pebble Beach Golf Club and the Lodge at Pebble Beach. It seems the golf-crazed Japanese are willing to buy any course in sight.

Earlier this year, two different Japanese investment companies wowed the 215 members of the Tamarack Country Club in Greenwich, Conn. by offering them between $50 million and $72 million for their club. Had club members agreed to the sale, they would have pocketed $250,000 each. But the deal collapsed when the Japanese refused to let the Americans keep their memberships longer than 10 years.

In addition to creative properties and real estate, there are now 7,109 Japanese firms operating in 47 states. This is a 10 percent increase in the past twelve months.

Mind you, given this invasion, and the fact the Japanese are out competing us in so many different sectors, does anyone think they'll stop before they've picked the flesh from the bones of American industry?

Part of the problem — in discussing why most Americans fear the Japanese threat more than they do the Soviets — is that the Japanese government and its many corporations have failed to institute broader changes in their respective economies to satisfy the world community. At the same time, one has to fault greedy U. S. bankers and sellers of property who are always looking for a quick buck.

At a very minimum, the recent sale of MCA/Universal to the Japanese should cause every American to recognize our nation's shifting strengths and obvious weaknesses.

Even Bush doesn't believe what he tells the public

Joseph Sobran
Universal Press Syndicate

WASHINGTON — Our casus belli du jour is that Saddam Hussein poses a potential — nay, a probable — nuclear threat. Aren't you glad you didn't fill in that bomb shelter in your back yard?

It took George Bush only four months to think of this one. Evidently his personal pollsters have discovered that this is the appeal most likely to stampede the American people into war fever, when all else fails. And all else has failed: naked aggression, Hitler, oil, new world order, hostages, jobs, worse than Hitler.

Of course, this puts everything in a different light. A nuclear threat! Well, forget Kuwait. If Saddam Hussein yanked his troops out of Kuwait tomorrow, with profuse apologies for the big (heh-heh) misunderstanding, he would remain a nuclear threat, and war against him was presumably no less imperative even before he chomped Kuwait.

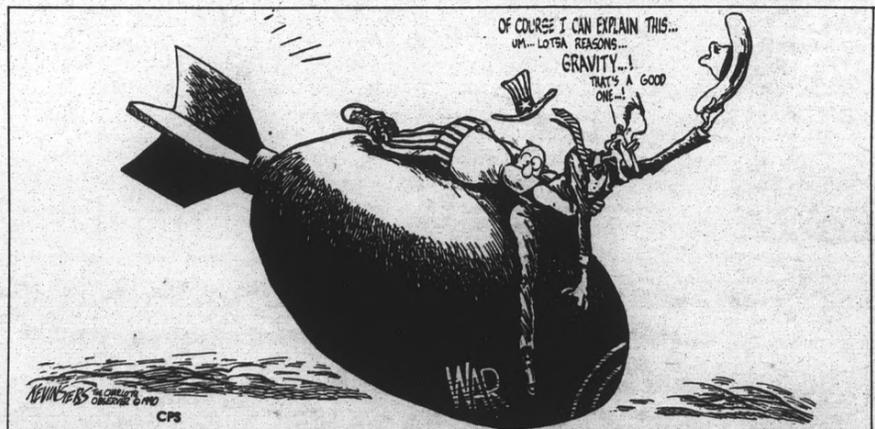

Of all recent presidents, Mr. Bush gives the impression of being the one who most frequently misses the wastebasket with his paper wads. He radiates ineptitude. As he moves jerkily from one rationale for war to the next, he merely reinforces the suspicion that each is offered insincerely, like a man calling in sick to work and giving four different ailments. His overstatements make it sound as if he confuses extravagance with seeming conviction. He imparts a whiff of cynicism, without the cunning that usually accompanies it. He expects the rest of us to believe things he apparently doesn't believe himself. This is the man who thought he'd connect with the voters by advertising his fondness for pork rinds.

And of all living former presidents, only one has spoken with passion about the Persian Gulf. That is Jimmy Carter, and he has been, as one might expect, critical of the Bush policy. The interesting thing is that three former Republican presidents — Nixon, Ford, and Reagan — haven't audibly disagreed with him.

What are we to make of this silence? If Messrs. Nixon, Ford and Reagan thought Mr. Bush was acting wisely, there is no obvious reason for them to be so quiet about it when their vocal support would be so helpful to him. But if they have reservations about what he's doing, their silence may signify their observance of the 11th Commandment: "Thou shalt not criticize a fellow Republican."

The media typecast Mr. Reagan in particular as a "bellicose" president — for his animadversions against communism, his Grenada invasion, his support of anti-communist rebels from Nicaragua to Angola to Afghanistan, and his beefed-up military budgets. But when it came to direct confrontation with our chief enemy, the Soviet Union, Mr. Reagan was notably cautious. He was careful not to overreact to some dangerous provocations, such as the shooting down of the Korean airliner KAL 007, and the killing of Maj. Nicholson in East Germany. And when the chance for peace with the Soviets really arrived, he snatched it — upsetting his old conservative supporters (including me).

The reason Mr. Reagan has said so little about Mr. Bush's Middle East venture may be that he remembers his own unhappy experience in the region. He put an American peacekeeping force in Lebanon in 1983. It didn't keep the peace and was driven out by the disaster of the Marine barracks in October of that year. Mr. Reagan was saved from political obloquy by the lucky coincidence that he had scheduled the Grenada invasion for almost the same day, but a Pentagon study later criticized the Lebanon operation as misconceived. I suspect he didn't need to be told by then. Now he may be thinking that his successor is making the same mistake on a far larger scale.

Mr. Reagan, the Great Communicator, was as unsuccessful at inspiring public enthusiasm for the Lebanon action as Mr. Bush has been with the gulf action. But at least he didn't overcommit us, and he didn't lurch from one implausible reason to another. And when he failed, he cut our losses and pulled out.

How can Mr. Bush know what he's doing when he can't even decide why he's doing it? And if his Republican predecessors are thinking what I think they're thinking, they would do the country a service by speaking out strongly, and soon. This is no time to be shackled by the 11th Commandment.

Center

The timetable to build the center is contingent on Coor's response to the report, and there is no estimate as to when a new center would be operational, officials said.

Bone, one of the two students on the Child Care Resources Advisory Committee, said the committee — which is comprised of students, faculty and staff — supported a majority student enrollment because they made up a majority of the campus population.

She said the advisory committee should have had more respect paid to its decision because it represented all University interests.

But Ben Forsyth, senior executive assistant to the ASU president, said that to be fair, the task force had to consider more than just numbers.

"It's a very complicated issue," he said. "I felt that the most equitable way would be to divide it equally 50-50."

Even though student parents far outnumber staff parents, Forsyth claimed few students would use the center during the day, compared to faculty and staff.

"You just can't count the number of students," he said.

Associated Students of ASU President Matt Ortega said he was concerned that a 50-50 split might preclude students who need child care during the day.

But Rey Gomez, chairman of the advisory committee that recommended the 65-35 ratio, said the task force concurred with all other measures recommended by the committee.

The advisory committee was not disappointed with the ratio, he added.

"We're delighted to have a center. That's the most important thing of all," Gomez said.

He said that although the advisory committee supports the 65-35 split, he could see Forsyth's view. He added that any final decision may be flexible and would depend on who enrolls at the center.

"We don't even know who is going to sign up for this," Gomez said.

Forsyth said he expects primarily students — almost 100 percent — to use the center.

Because of extended care, Forsyth said students likely would log more hours in the center even though there would be an equal number of students and faculty and staff.

"It's really hard to set arbitrary rules," he said.

Forsyth said that whatever is decided could be subject to change after implementation, adding that it was impossible to assess what the student, faculty or staff need will be.

"Experience in the end will tell us," he said.

"I think they're doing what they can do," he said. The United States began sending troops to Saudi Arabia after Iraq invaded Kuwait on Aug. 2. Last Thursday, the Security Council of the United Nations approved the use of force and demanded that Iraq leave Kuwait by Jan. 15.

Doug Carlson, an undeclared graduate student in the Marine reserves, said he feels the United Nations' decision is just a "starting point for more political negotiations."

"I don't think anything will happen until February or March — conflict-wise," he said. "I think it will just be a time for Iraq to let us know what they want with Kuwait."

Written said he is not really worried about the United Nations' decision.

"I always felt something was going to happen," he said. "Conflict is pretty imminent."

Most of the students said the waiting was the worst part. "As much as I'd like it resolved peacefully, I don't want to sit there on my butt," Van Zanten said. "I'd want to just go in, get it over with and come back home."

Carlson expressed his situation poignantly. "Life as we know it has stopped," he said.

- An ASU student was arrested after he was found on top of Parking Structure 5. Police charged him with criminal trespassing after he allegedly looked into windows at Palo Verde Main Residence Hall.
- A window at Ocotillo Residence Hall was broken. Estimated damage is $100.

- A man not affiliated with ASU was arrested at Noble Science Library and charged with disorderly conduct.
- Two juveniles were observed with a bow and arrows in the field area at the northwest end of campus. Police warned them about trespassing.

- A telephone was stolen from an ASU student's room at Manzanita Residence Hall.

Tempe police reported the following incidents Monday:

- A 28-year-old woman was sexually assaulted late Sunday at her residence in the 1200 block of West 10th Street. The victim was in her laundry room when a man entered, put a jacket over her head and threatened to kill her if she looked at him. He then forced her to the floor and sexually assaulted her.

Police said the man entered the residence through the back yard and fled the scene on foot. The victim was treated at Tempe St. Luke's Medical Center.

The suspect is a 30-year-old white male, 5-foot-8, 130 pounds, with brown hair, bangs and brown eyes. He was last seen wearing a maroon windbreaker. No weapon was observed.

- A 21-year-old ASU student was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct after he allegedly urinated in a parking lot on the east side of a bank at the intersection of 6th Street and Mill Avenue. Fourteen portable toilets were nearby at the time of the alleged incident.
- An ASU student was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct, and threatening and obstructing a police officer at the Sport Rock Cafe, 1320 E. Broadway Road. The student was allegedly involved in a fight and would not stop after police arrived. The officer said the student tried to hit him.
- A 27-year-old ASU student was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct and falsification after he allegedly became upset while trying to open the trunk of his vehicle and yelling at a woman nearby. He was also allegedly in possession of a false identification card.

business trip.

Izzo said he escaped by jumping from a wing to the ground. He was not hurt.

"The people that made it down and out were crawling through the slush into the middle of the field," he said. "I just watched the fire spread across the plane and engulf the entire fuselage."

Izzo said he was seated in Row 10 and believes people in the rows behind him could not get out.

The body of the 727 did not appear to have been seriously damaged in the collision. One passenger, 60-year-old Robert Karp of Jackson, Miss., said passengers from the 727 walked off the plane and down the stairs.

"It sounded to me like it was a loud thump," said Karp, a professor at Jackson State University.

"I thought the tire had blown out. The front end of the plane had begun to lift off. I don't think the back wheels were off the ground yet. As soon as I heard the thump we came to an abrupt stop. I remember looking at the other plane and seeing smoke rolling out."

McNamara said the only injuries on the Boeing were those that occurred during the plane's evacuation.

civilians died before order was restored, the government news agency Telam reported. The civilians were in a bus hit by a tank.

Twenty people were injured in that crash, Telam reported. At least 11 soldiers and one rebel were shot and wounded, the army said, along with at least 10 civilians, local news agencies reported.

Menem said banks and foreign exchange houses would reopen Tuesday following the bank holiday declared Monday by the Economy Ministry.

Jorge Newbery metropolitan airport was reopened Monday night. The state of siege, suspending constitutional guarantees, will be lifted by week's end, Menem said.

The insurrection, broadcast live on television and radio, disrupted Buenos Aires.

Banks were ordered closed at 1:30 p.m. Federal employees were sent home two hours later. The stock exchange closed early. Federal police barred public gatherings. Key roads were blocked off to protect civilians and give priority to military traffic. Security at Congress and Government House, where Menem has his office, was reinforced.

Bullets lodged in Government House and the Economy Ministry. Vice President Eduardo Duhalde's helicopter was hit by gunfire as it landed at Government House, but Duhalde was unhurt.

The uprising began at about 3:30 a.m. when rebels, their faces blackened commando-style, appeared at army headquarters and took over several floors.

About the same time, other rebels seized the Palermo infantry base and Boulogne tank factory.

They insisted they were not out to overthrow the government.

Professor works to continue AIDS research

By ANDREW FAUGHT
State Press

Justice Studies Professor Michael Musheno is taking it upon himself to make ASU a prime resource for researching legal, social and cultural dimensions of the deadly AIDS virus.

While funding for community organizations addressing AIDS has dwindled, Musheno said he is organizing faculty and students researching AIDS to make a concerted effort to keep the issue "on the front burner" in Arizona, in hopes of spurring the Legislature to appropriate funds.

Musheno mentioned the demise of the Phoenix group, Women and AIDS Research Network — a program designed to educate inner-city intravenous drug users of the AIDS-related health risks associated with their drug habit — that died after federal funding subsided and local groups could not sustain the program.

"All that progress that was made in AIDS research is in danger now because funding is not continuing," Musheno said.

To address the problem, Musheno said he has, to date, rounded up eight faculty members in various disciplines to formulate an interdisciplinary focus for AIDS research and expects the group to become functional in the spring.

"One of the reasons the (AIDS) virus has leveled off in gay community's like New York and San Francisco is because those city's have strong gay organizations that have developed programs to address AIDS," Musheno said. "People on campus are now doing research on self-help organizations."

Rose Weitz, a professor of sociology and a member of Musheno's network group, said the presence of a variety of interdisciplinary perspectives will benefit research at ASU.

"It's always a good idea when people who have similar research interests can have a chance to work in this kind of collaboration," she said. "It's very helpful in generating research and ideas."

In 1989, Arizona diagnosed 390 cases of AIDS — 289 of these in Maricopa County alone — according to the Maricopa County Division of Public Health.

Anne Schneider, dean of the College of Public Programs, said Musheno's venture, which is partly funded by the college and a National Science Foundation Grant, should be a valuable resource for community groups researching AIDS.

"We would like to become a national research resource for the social science researchers around the country," Schneider said. "This kind of a program in a university can become a clearing-house for research and ideas."

Jane Aiken, professor of law, member of the University's research program and head of the governor's task force on AIDS, said ASU's endeavor is a wonderful link between the University and community, and may increase the likelihood of Arizona receiving future research funds.

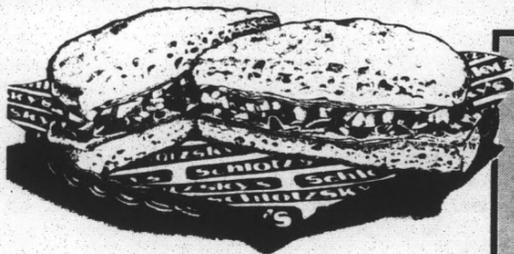

"(The group) will encourage academic research on issues of AIDS that will help form policy for the state and the nation," she said.

FREDERICK, Md. (AP) — The Russians asking questions about basketball over the Moscow-to-Washington hot line? The Cold War really must be over.

Experts manning the hot line, which was rededicated today after a $4.7 million upgrade, see evidence of glasnost in test transmissions from the Soviets.

"The project has helped keep the peace all these years and this upgrade allows us to have state-of-the-art communications," Lt. Gen. Jerome B. Hilmes, director of information systems in the office of the Secretary of the Army, said at a ribbon-cutting ceremony today.

Routine, maintenance-related dispatches have actually become chatty.

"Could we ask an unofficial question about basketball?" the Soviets asked last February over the communications link set up after the Cuban missile crisis to avert the accidental outbreak of war. "Could you please tell us how our Kurtinaitis performed against your snipers?"

The Soviets were referring to Rimas Kurtinaitis, a 6-foot-5 star from Lithuania. The National Basketball Association had invited Kurtinaitis to challenge eight NBA stars in a three-point shooting contest in Houston. "Snipers" apparently was the Soviets' translation of long-range basketball shooters.

"We'd like to know how he feels in the NBA," the Soviets asked.

Sun Devil athletes learn to play with pain, not injury

By AMY SLADE

Contributing writer

Ladies and gentleman, presenting your Arizona State Sun Devils.

At third base, a deep bruise to the inside of the knee.

And batting third, bone spurs in the elbow.

Playing with pain is part of ASU athletics. It is expected from the fans as well as the coaches and trainers. But, like any university, there is pain and there is injury.

"We will ask a player to play with pain, but we may not ask him to play with an injury," ASU baseball trainer Dave Grossman said. "We don't want him to hurt himself and be put in a position where he would be out longer."

"We've got 29 guys on the roster right now. Nineteen of them have played with some kind of little hurt this fall. That's almost 66 percent."

Grossman said the amount of players who have "played hurt" this season is slightly higher than normal.

Jim Austin, who developed shoulder tendonitis in his rotator cuff this summer while playing for the USA baseball team in Japan, said the game is too much fun to sit on the bench.

"Besides, I don't want to sit on my ass and get fat," he said. "As long as I'm loose and feel good, I think it is my duty as co-captain to go out and play, especially after the year I had."

In 1989, Austin had a .358 batting average, 17 home runs and 57 RBI.

"I want to win just as much as the next guy," he said. "You can't help the team win by sitting on the bench."

"The coach won't keep me out of the lineup for a small injury, but he's not going to play me if it'll make things worse."

Grossman agreed small injuries are not a problem but said "there are varying degrees of hurt."

The ASU fall baseball roster included everything from bruises to muscle strains to bone chips.

"They are big boys, they should be able to deal with the pain as long as they aren't at a risk," he said. "Some can tolerate it, others can't."

Austin, the tough-image outfielder who played in 66 of the Devils 68 games last year, said he is treated every day while he is injured.

"The trainer gives me a moist heat pack before practice and then a combination of ultrasound and muscle stimulator," Austin said. "I get iced down after practice and then again after the game."

"If it was my decision, I'd play everyday. But it doesn't work that way. I tell the trainer how I feel and he makes a decision about my condition. Then he tells the coach what he thinks, and the two of them decide whether or not I'm capable of playing without risking further injury."

Austin, a junior likely to be drafted at the end of the season, added that playing hurt would not affect his value in the upcoming June draft because he was "still putting the numbers up on the board. It's not a problem for me because I can tolerate pain."

Neil Lomax, former Phoenix Cardinals quarterback and ESPN college football analyst, said football players are expected to play hurt more often than baseball players because they are "big boys."

"The tough guy image of an athlete should never overtake the situation," Lomax said.

"He may feel super and ready to play, but it's not going to happen if the doctor or coach feel differently. I've got an arthritic hip and I feel great. But there's no way any coach or doctor would let me play football."

"I'd say that 90 percent of the guys playing in your average game have some form of a ouchie. "It's difficult to judge the pain threshold of other players."

During one point of the ASU football season, 11 of the original 22 starters were hurt. Eventually, nine position players were playing hurt because of more injuries to the reserves.

Perry Edinger, ASU football trainer, agreed injuries are part of the game, but the only explanation as to why ASU has been overloaded with them this fall is a "bad luck, period."

Edinger said players will play hurt, but ASU will not play a team member when it would risk further damage or a potentially long-term effect.

"Depending on the motivation of a player, we may have to push someone to get them back out on the field," Edinger said. "Other guys can't wait to get out there."

Darrell Banks, who strained ligaments in his ankle on the last day of fall football camp, said that when he is hurt, he likes to get back as soon as possible.

"It's no fun watching when you want to be playing," the linebacker said. "But if you are too hurt, they won't play you because you are no use to the team."

"You've got to go out there and do whatever you feel you can do. You may not be 100 percent, but what you contribute is better than being totally inactive."

ASU football coach Larry Marmie keeps in close contact with the trainer about the status of injured players. However, he said there is "zero involvement" on his part to decide whether a player is capable of playing.

"Perry reports to me everyday at 8:30 a.m.," Marmie said. "We go over all the treatments and he tells me what the problem is with each of the players. He tells me how the players feel and shows me a list of how he sees his involvement in practice."

"Depending on how he is listed, he may be at his own pace and will do only what he is capable of doing. We may decide not to even bring him out on the field. If treatment will help, it makes more sense to leave him in the training room. But if a kid doesn't practice, it's very difficult for him to be ready by game time. Only the true veterans can do that."

Edinger prepares injury reports before each practice.

"We can list a guy in several different categories depending on his injury," Edinger said. "If he's listed as 'no practice,' obviously there could be potential harm if he does anything."

"Another player might be listed as 'no contact.' That can also be a potentially harmful injury, so we don't want him to try and do too much. Something like 'go-as-can' is left up to the player to do what he feels capable of doing."

The same is true in baseball. Todd Steverson, who sprained and bruised his knee in a car accident, said, "I check my limitations and go as far as I can. But it's important to make sure my injury is secure and stable."

Steverson, a sophomore who had a .500 batting average before his accident, started at designated hitter in a recent fall baseball game although he was only "75 percent."

"I knew Todd was fine to hit and was at 75 percent running," ASU baseball coach Jim Brock said. "I told him to do what he felt he could do."

Steverson, who struggled last year, hitting only .189, played despite injuries because he "loves the game."

"I just want to contribute to the team and you can't contribute sitting on the bench," Steverson said.

"As long as I won't hurt myself worse, you can count on my name being in the lineup."

He finished the fall with a .483 batting average (13-for-27).

Like other injured players, Steverson is treated at least once, sometimes twice a day.

Kendall Carter, former ASU recruiting coach and current Seattle Mariner scout, said injuries can affect whether a player is recruited or drafted.

Swimmers capture title at Open

By DARREN URBAN

State Press

The ASU men's swim team came up with their biggest win of the fall this weekend, capturing the team title at the U. S. Open meet in Indianapolis.

The Sun Devils tallied 199 points, edging out the united German team by four.

"We beat some very good teams," ASU coach Ron Johnson said. "It was an enjoyable victory."

The Sun Devils beat out an international field, which included Sweden, Germany and the U. S. national team.

"It was a good win," sophomore Emmanuel Nascimento said. "We thought we would get it as a team."

"Most of the teams weren't as prepared as us," Johnson said.

Senior Eric Wilhelm said the victory on a long course was the best part of the successful trip.

"Normally, we only compete in short courses," Wilhelm said. "So winning in the long course is really exciting."

Johnson

Three individuals and one relay team accomplished the pre-meet goal of NCAA qualifying times. Freshman David Holderbach qualified in the 200-meter backstroke, and Nascimento swam the 100-meter freestyle in 50.96 seconds, not only getting an NCAA time but also setting a Brazilian record.

Wilhelm qualified in both the 400-meter and 1,500-meter freestyle events, although he said he did have some disappointment.

"I went in seeded first and finished sixth, so I wasn't real happy about that," Wilhelm said. "But I'm psyched. (Getting my times) is what I originally came to do."

Wilhelm, senior Troy Dalbey, junior Steve Carroll and sophomore Willy Landmark qualified in the 800-meter freestyle relay, winning the title in the event.

"For three of us, it was our first national title," Wilhelm said.

Nascimento said the fall has been a good one for ASU.

"A lot of people have worked very hard," he said. "We've done a good job this fall."

"It's been a productive fall," Wilhelm said. "It gives us a great base for the spring."

Marmie situation still up in air after VU hiring

From staff and wire reports

Gerry DiNardo, who is credited with developing top-ranked Colorado's I-Bone offense, was named Monday as head football coach at Vanderbilt University, ending speculation that ASU coach Larry Marmie would be named to that position.

Marmie's name had been tossed around to replace Watson Brown because he is a good friend of the Vandy athletic director, supposedly putting him on the school's "wish list," and because his job security as the Sun Devil coach is in jeopardy after a 4-7 season and a 16-16-1 career mark in three seasons.

Rumors are that a decision on Marmie's job future at ASU will be made sometime this week. However, ASU Athletic Director Charles Harris is currently in San Francisco for Pac-10 meetings and will not return until Thursday for the team banquet.

After the Sun Devils' Coca-Cola Bowl loss to Houston in Tokyo Saturday, Marmie reportedly held a closed-door meeting with only his players, some of whom came out crying afterward.

Injuries

"We don't want to recruit a guy who can never play because he's always hurt," he said. "Their ability to tolerate pain is something we look at."

Lomax agreed that it is important for athletes to be able to tolerate pain.

"But it's not worth trying to play hurt for one game and end up missing the entire season. Any team can play without one guy for a particular game. But if a guy ends up missing the entire season because he played hurt, then you've got a problem."

"In the NFL, guys have to play hurt because it is their job. They get paid a lot of money to take the abuse that they do. In college, it's not a job, but a matter of pride for the team. Everyone wants to play and show their spirit for the school."

Although Lomax said college athletes simply play to show school spirit, ASU linebacker Darren Woodson disagreed.

"This is our job," said the senior, who sprained his right ankle in this year's Missouri game. "When you get hurt, it all goes down the drain. It's not any fun being unemployed."

"I work hard all during the off season trying to keep in shape. The team is counting on me to play. The thrill of playing in front of 77,000 people outweighs not being 100 percent."

Another ASU athlete, Jim Henderson, a designated hitter and back-up catcher for the baseball team, agreed he had a job to do.

"I'm not 100 percent, but I have to play hurt, or I could hurt the team," Henderson said.

Henderson, who had elbow surgery three years ago, now has bone spurs rubbing on the tendons and ligaments in his elbow.

The senior, who is likely to turn pro at the end of the season, said he is more relaxed at the plate when he is hurt because there is no pressure for him to excel.

"It's more of a mental thing," Henderson said. "I just block out my injury when I'm trying to perform."

"Injuries aren't always bad. They can sometimes help you because you don't try to do too much. You don't think about trying to hit the ball out, you just want to make contact.

"It may be hard to swing, but I don't think about it. I just think about what I have to accomplish and try to keep the injury out of the picture."

Henderson played with a broken hand last year during the regionals and had "the best week of his life." During the 1989 regional tournament, he was 11-for-21, a .524 batting average.

"I wish I could play hurt more often," he said.

Like his teammate Austin, Henderson needs treatment for his injury, but the amount of attention he receives varies depending on how he feels.

"I always have ice on it after the game, but my daily treatments vary," Henderson said. "Usually, it's only a little inflamed so I don't need much attention."

He added that it gets worse when he doesn't play because he doesn't use his arm as much.

"This summer, I didn't play because I had too much other stuff going on," he said. "I'm paying for that now."

Henderson's injury can be more career-threatening than Austin's because it won't go away without surgery, but he still seemed sure of himself that he could play hurt.

"The decision isn't up to me, but I always want to be available for the lineup," Henderson said. "I'll tell the coach how I feel and then he'll make a decision based on that and what the trainer tells him."

"If I'm not doing so well, Coach might take me out because he thinks my injury is interfering with my quality of play."

Kevin Minifield, a cornerback for ASU, is an example of a player with "the will" to play.

"The risk of getting hurt is always there, but I don't focus on it," said the junior, who strained his left knee in the Missouri game. "I just go play and do my job. Playing hurt is part of the game."

"Any player who has a competitive nature, like I do, wants to help his team win. When a team is struggling, like we are, it motivates me even more because I have to do that much better."

Women's hoops hopes to win 4th versus NAU

By KRIS TIMMONS
State Press

The ASU women's basketball team has a perfect 3-0 record — except for the 90-84 preseason loss to the German national team in mid-November.

The other three games have consisted of two blowouts and a nail-biter.

The first blowout came against NAU when the Sun Devils pounded the Lumberjacks, 99-42, in both teams' season opener in Flagstaff Nov. 23. ASU's 99 points was the highest total by a women's Sun Devil team since 1985.

ASU has the opportunity to extend their win streak to four games as it hosts NAU (0-3) at the University Activity Center tonight at 7.

"We played them once already and we know they will be an improved team," Sun Devil coach Maura McHugh said. "They practiced twice (Monday) so we know they're looking to be little tougher but I hope we've gotten better too."

Although ASU had an easy time of it with the Lumberjacks in the season opener, McHugh said the contest will be treated no differently.

"We are going to go out and play with the same expectations of playing the hardest we can play," McHugh said.

McHugh said the key to a victory over the Lumberjacks will be to get their scoring back on track. During their 76-68 win over the University of San Diego Saturday, the Sun Devils field-goal shooting percentage was a disappointing 34.1 percent.

"We didn't shoot the ball well," McHugh said. "We were lucky to have won the game considering our shooting percentage. But we forced a lot of turnovers and that was key for us winning."

"We've got to shoot the ball well and improve on our shot selection."

The shooting slump shouldn't continue, according to McHugh.

"I hope it's just a one-time thing," the fourth-year coach said. "There's always going to be a night where you have a bad night, but you just hope they don't all have one on the same night."

Wrestlers take 3rd in Vegas

From staff reports

The fourth-ranked ASU wrestling team fell short of defending its team championship, but turned in an impressive performance by finishing third at the Las Vegas-Hall of Fame Invitational this weekend.

The Sun Devils scored 94.75 points, 4.25 points behind runner-up Iowa State and miles back of first-place Oklahoma State. The defending NCAA champions blew away the rest of the field by racking up 173 points.

ASU's Rex Holman won the championship at 190 pounds with a 5-3 decision over OSU's Randy Couture. Holman, ranked ninth in the nation, advanced to the championship with a pinfall over Cal State-Chico's Carson Wollert at 6:30, a 13-2 decision over Stanford's Mark Graham, a 10-3 decision over BYU's Rick Evans and a 5-3 decision over Purdue's Mike McHenry.

But the Sun Devils suffered a big loss when Andy McNaughton (142 pounds) popped a rib in his third-round match against Clemson's Jim Carazola. McNaughton, who had just returned from an ankle injury, will be out for about six weeks.

Marco Sanchez (134 pounds) also had to drop out of the tournament when he suffered a cut on his knee and had to forfeit his fifth-place match to ISU's Mike Moreno.

G. T. Taylor finished third at 167 pounds with an 11-4 decision over Stanford's Steve Buddie, who was seeded first in the tournament.

Heavyweight Mike Anderson placed fourth with a 6-0 decision over San Francisco State's Matt Blevin, who was seeded fifth.

Shawn Charles was fourth at 126 pounds by winning five matches before losing to ISU's Dan Knight in the third-place match.

ASU is led by sophomore forward Jovonne Smith, who is averaging 19 points and almost 11 boards per game.

"Jovonne is really not a shooter, but she's a scorer," McHugh said. "She rebounds really well and her quickness allows her to get open.

"I'm glad to see her come out and have three games like she has."

Junior guard Michele Cherry has made a large contribution to the Sun Devils in the first three games. Cherry, who served as the team manager last season, is averaging 14.3 points and 7.3 rebounds per contest.

"She is playing very well," McHugh said. "She comes to play every night. She has been a good addition to the team."

Some believers in the myth of a safe academic environment are hit with the harsh reality of campus crime...assault, rape, even murder. And the majority of the perpetrators, believe it or not, are your fellow students.
