Community discusses campus growth

By MICHELLE ROBERTS
State Press

More than 50 community members met with ASU officials Wednesday to discuss the effect future University growth will have on Tempe.

The public and officials met informally to review the beginning stages of the ASU Master Plan, which will help guide campus development for the next 20 years. University officials said the plan is in its research stages and that no concrete proposals have been made.

Research for the master plan began three months ago, and the project is expected to be completed in one year.

The plan addresses districting, vehicular circulation, tram services, parking, bike paths, potential redevelopment, expansion areas, uses for Tempe Center, campus malls, landmarks, the periphery of campus and open spaces.

Mel Firestone, secretary for ASU Faculty Senate, said he was most concerned about crowding in ASU's malls.

"If I'm not put under by a bicycle, it'll be a surprise," he said, adding that he thinks campus malls should encompass more of an "open" effect.

However, community concerns about the plan mostly dealt with traffic patterns, land acquisitions, integrating the city's transit system with ASU, how the campus blends aesthetically with the rest of the community and other issues involving ASU's borders.

"We have a big stake in the University," said George Wittenberg of the University Heights Neighborhood Association, "We live here and we love it — we want to see it develop properly."

Wittenberg said ASU and the city need to work together to install bike paths to regulate the "10,000 to 15,000 bikes" on Lemon Street.

Dan Durrenberger of the Daily Park Neighborhood Association said he thinks there should be a neighborhood representative on the master plan task force.

The 17-member task force includes students, faculty and representatives from

Students rally against paper

By JENNIFER FRANKLIN
State Press

About 250 students gathered on ASU's West Lawn Wednesday to hear minority student leaders vent their frustration with a college newspaper they claim is not covering culturally diverse issues on campus.

The rally was held to raise support for the demands of four minority coalitions, which include a request for a two-page weekly cultural diversity section in the State Press.

Representatives from the Asian Student Coalition, the Afro-American Coalition, the American Indian Council and the Chicano-Hispano Coalition told the crowd that changes in the State Press and the University's cultural diversity program need to take place.

The coalitions listed four demands in a flier distributed on campus Monday, giving State Press editors two days to respond.

Bach Ta, a representative from the Asian Student Coalition, said the newspaper consistently fails to reach Asians on minority issues.

"The purpose of the State Press is to bring all students together," he said. "We feel like they haven't been doing very well."

Suzanne Ross, State Press editor and Meg Halverson, State Press Magazine editor, invited all interested to apply for a job at the newspaper.

"I agree that we need a more diversified staff at the State Press, but we just don't get applications from minority students," Ross said. "It was brought up a number of times

ASU to focus on faculty, staff salary increases

By KEVIN SHEH
State Press

Increased salaries for faculty and staff tops ASU's Christmas list as students, faculty and administrators mobilize to set their legislative agendas.

Meanwhile, lawmakers, many of whom have pledged to stifle spending at any cost, said ASU likely will receive less than the $187 million it received for fiscal year 1990-91.

ASU President Lattie Coor summarized the common goal in three words.

"Salaries, salaries, salaries," he said. "We have got to continue to battle for salaries — for both staff and faculty — to be effective in the future."

The Legislature approved a 4 percent market equity adjustment in July after an Arthur Young study revealed that faculty and classified staff salaries at the three state universities are below the current market level.

Coor said he was pleased with the "courage the Legislature showed" in approving the previous faculty hike.

"But we have got to push forward," Coor said. "We're going full bore."

However, Rep. John Wettaw, R-Flagstaff, said additional money for higher education is unlikely.

"The universities will be getting less money," he said. "The state will have less dollars next year than this year."

State Relations Director Rob Miller, an Arizona Students' Association delegate, agreed that faculty salaries are a top priority.

"They're getting paid so poorly as it is," he said. "It is a prime concern of students to (ensure that) the University can recruit and maintain quality teachers."

Low salaries will attract lower quality faculty and staff, which will directly affect the quality of undergraduate education and student life, Miller added.

Not all of ASA's agenda will require revenue, however. Voter registration reform also is of paramount concern, Miller said.

Currently, people can register to vote up to 29 days before an election and must do so through a deputy registrar.

"If they're lucky enough to find a deputy registrar," Miller said. "With the way the Maricopa County 'politburo' is set up, that's hard to do."

Instead, ASA is proposing to eliminate the deputy registrars and replace them with a postcard registration system, he said.

In addition, the people would have up to 21 days before an election to register to vote, Miller added.

"It would be a lot less restrictive and a lot more convenient for students," he said.

Expanding the Arizona Financial Aid

Trust Fund, a plan under which the Legislature matches students' $6 contributions, also is on ASA's agenda.

Under the expanded plan, students would provide at least a $7 annual contribution that would be matched by the Legislature.

ASA Executive Director Larry L'Heureux said the market equity adjustments would be the toughest goal to achieve.

"That's a tough one to get," he said. "We're talking about a big chunk of money."

AFAT shouldn't be as difficult to achieve, L'Heureux said.

"But it will be a blow to students if we don't get it," he added.

L'Heureux said that any legislation requiring additional money could be resisted by the Legislature.

"It will be interesting to see how this plays out. Money bills will be a rare, rare breed," he said.

ASU seeks to recognize effective teachers

By ANDREW FAUGHT
State Press

ASU is making efforts to recognize outstanding teaching faculty, University officials said in response to a recent study that concluded universities need to revamp their academic structures to give greater recognition to teachers.

The report was released this week by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching.

Henry Reeves, ASU vice president for research, said that while the administration continues to work on methods for recognizing outstanding teaching professors, the criteria for measuring their accomplishments often is not as evident as

Carnegie study claims universities should pay more regard to experience the feats of professors involved in research. "Teaching is a lot more difficult to evaluate than research," Reeves said. "With research, there are a lot more milestones you can look at."

Reeves said student and faculty peer evaluations are a significant measure of determining a professor's effectiveness.

A report stated that defining the work of a professor on the basis of research "denies many powerful realities" to students. There is a need, it said, for non-research faculty committed to service to be recognized.

Anne Schneider, dean of the College of Public Programs, said a false dichotomy is being drawn when teaching and research are treated as separate entities, adding that research is the basis of teaching.

"Without research, what would we base our public service work on?" she asked. "The quality of education isn't the same without research."

Schneider said a "Leg of the Stool" award is given annually to an outstanding faculty member, teacher and public service official in the college for outstanding accomplishments. The award also grants each recipient a $1,000 salary raise.

Larry Penley, dean of the College of Business, said his college rewards teachers and researchers with grants. He added that it is possible for a faculty member both to be a proficient teacher and researcher.

"Each year, we recognize the distinguished teacher and researcher independently at a luncheon," he said. "I think we've done a very good job of that."

Acknowledging the talents of professors has long been an issue, Reeves said.

"Often the very best research people are outstanding teachers," he said. "They will go ahead and teach the larger freshman classes to get them excited and enthusiastic."

Baker starts preparation for Gulf talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State James Baker appealed Wednesday for broad support of the administration's Persian Gulf policy so he can credibly tell Saddam Hussein when they meet: "Get out of Kuwait or risk all."

He said he would not negotiate with Saddam on the visit, which the State Department said had been formally accepted by Baghdad. And he added a new warning: "If force must be used, it will be used suddenly, massively and decisively."

The State Department said Joseph Wilson, the charge d'affaires at the U. S. Embassy in Baghdad, had been informed of Iraq's acceptance of the Baker trip, which President Bush proposed last week.

Meanwhile, Bush said in a news conference in Buenos Aires, Argentina, that the United States would make no effort to give Saddam a face-saving way out.

"When naked aggression takes place, it's not a question of finding face for the aggressor," Bush said during questioning on his South American trip. He added, "When a country is literally raped and pillaged, should the world go out and try to find a way to save face for he who has raped and pillaged that country?"

He said he was not optimistic Saddam Hussein would leave Kuwait without a fight.

Baker, laying out a hard U. S. line before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said international sanctions against Iraq have not worked. He added that he was "very pessimistic" they would if given more time, as some congressional Democrats have strongly recommended, and said the threat of attack now holds the best chance for peace.

He said a formal congressional statement of support for using force if necessary "would, I think, significantly reduce the risk of war." But a congressional debate that led to an equivocal message would be counterproductive, he added.

"Congress and the American people must tell Saddam Hussein in unmistakable actions and words: 'Get out of Kuwait now or risk all,'" Baker said.

"Put bluntly, this is the last best chance for a peaceful solution," Baker said of his upcoming trip to Iraq, on which dates and arrangements were being worked out.

"If (Saddam) is not stopped now, if his aggressive designs are not frustrated — peacefully if possible, or if necessary by force — we will all pay a much higher price later on," Baker said.

Responding to a growing chorus on Capitol Hill calling for patience and more reliance on sanctions, Baker said: "Nobody can ever tell you that sanctions alone can force Saddam Hussein out of Kuwait. I am personally very pessimistic that they will."

Citing intelligence assessments, Baker said four months of a well-enforced embargo have so far produced no glimmer of change in Saddam's position. "Instead, he seems to be doubling his bets," Baker told the committee.

If Baker made any converts on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, they were not evident.

Arms reduction progress made

WASHINGTON (AP) — U. S. and Soviet negotiators have resolved three big stumbling blocks as they work to complete a nuclear arms pact for President Bush and Mikhail Gorbachev to sign in Moscow early next year, U. S. officials said Tuesday.

The two sides, in meetings over the last month, have agreed to limit Soviet Backfire bombers outside the treaty, to allow U. S. nuclear programs with Great Britain to continue and to restrict the launch and payload weight of the Soviets' modernized, ground-based SS-18 missiles, said an official who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

Plans for Bush's trip to Moscow are on hold while the negotiators try to reach agreement on other technical matters involving inspection of weapons systems and interpretation of missile data.

The White House has said Bush will go to Moscow only if the treaty — which aims to cut U. S. and Soviet arsenals of long-range nuclear weapons by 30 percent — is ready for signing. The pact will call for scrapping hundreds of warheads under close supervision.

Experts from both sides will meet Friday in Washington to work on the remaining technical matters. The session is a precursor to the meeting between Secretary of State James Baker and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze in Houston on Monday or Tuesday.

The two are expected to thrash out their remaining differences and set a date for the Moscow summit. Shevardnadze is to then fly to Washington to see Bush on Wednesday.

Recent negotiating sessions produced agreement on three of the outstanding differences holding up the pact, known as START, for Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty, officials said. Specifically:

- The United States agreed that the Soviet Backfire bomber can be counted separately from other strategic weapons under the agreement, officials said. A separate letter, outside the actual START treaty, would limit the number of Backfires.

- Initially the United States had maintained the bombers had to be included in the overall START limits of 1,600 heavy bombers and other ballistic missiles the Soviets can retain, said an official close to the talks.

- The source declined to reveal the number of Backfires that would be permitted. The Soviets have 355 Backfires now, according to an estimate by the International Institute for Strategic Studies, a London-based think tank.

Study: Doctors owning X-ray machines may overuse them

BOSTON (AP) — Doctors take four times as many X-rays when they own X-ray machines and make money on them, according to a study that provides new evidence of how profits may influence the way physicians practice medicine.

Doctors make a profit on every picture they take with their own equipment. But they earn nothing when they send patients to other specialists for X-rays.

In recent years, many doctors have purchased X-ray and ultrasound machines so they can take diagnostic images in their offices. While they argue that this is convenient for them and their patients, critics suspect that the chance to make more money is also a big incentive to buy and operate these machines.

The new study provides circumstantial evidence that doctors who own their own imaging machines may overuse the equipment, simply to collect fees. Compared to those who send their patients to radiologists, those who own X-ray and ultrasound machines take four times as many diagnostic images for such common complaints as colds and backaches, according to the study published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

Dr. Bruce Hillman of the University of Arizona, who directed the study, cautioned that it could not determine whether the extra X-rays were needed. It also couldn't delve into doctors' reasons for taking them.

However, he said: "Almost certainly one has to wonder whether it's an issue of having these machines and realizing that incomes can be increased by their utilization. That doesn't mean I believe that physicians are sinisterly abusing imaging. But when they come to the crossroads of making the decision and they have the machine in the office, it's awfully easy to decide that the patient needs it."

Ethical guidelines agree that doctors' decisions should be based solely on what is best for patients' health, not physician's finances.

An editorial last year in the Journal of the American Medical Association said that while doctors are free to own equipment, "the patient's interest must always be uppermost. Exploitation for any reason is reprehensible."

Enemy roulette

Our enemies become our friends fast nowadays

Mike Royko
Tribune Media Syndicate

While most families were spending the long Thanksgiving weekend eating, swapping memories, shopping, watching football games or just loafing, Daniel and Susan were writing a letter to President Bush.

The White House gets a lot of mail, so I don't know if Bush has seen the Cohens' letter. Probably not. But this is what it says:

"Mr. President:

"Many Americans are spending this long weekend with their families, and that is what we should be doing. However, on this day we are alone because our only child, our daughter Theodora, was killed in the terrorist bombing of Pan Am 103, along with 269 other innocent people, most of them Americans.

"Because of the bombing, there were a lot of empty places around Thanksgiving tables in America this year. You spent the day after Thanksgiving with a man without whom this act of mass murder would not have been possible, Hafez al-Assad, dictator of Syria.

"You said, with obvious pride in your voice, that you had 'no problem' meeting in friendship with this master of terrorism, as long as he aided in the coalition against Iraq that you are trying to hold together.

"This is cynical, amoral, and unforgivable. There must be some limits to realpolitik, but apparently you do not know what they are. Assas is more than 'the enemy of our enemy.' He is our enemy.

"You said you were almost moved to tears by pictures of the victims of atrocities in Kuwait. Not long ago, pictures of the victims of the atrocity at Lockerbie were produced at the inquiry being held in Scotland. They were so horrible that family members of the victims had to prove that they had received psychological counseling before they were allowed to see the photos. If you wish, we could arrange to have these photos sent to you. Perhaps they would bring the horror of the Pan Am atrocity home. You were elected to be President of the United States, not chief protector of the al-Sabah and Saudi families.

"You have said that we must stop aggression now or America will have to pay a higher price in the future. Can not the same be said for terrorism? Indeed, you have given lip service to that very idea. But when faced with the reality of terrorism, you have shown that you prefer to make deals with the terrorists. The American public now knows how to 'read your lips.' We suspect that Hafez al-Assad knows how to do it as well.

"By sitting down with one of the chief architects of the Pan Am horror, and by playing a game of winks and nods with Iran, the other nation behind the terror, you have dishonored all those who were murdered. And you have dishonored the nation which you increasingly fail to lead."

End of letter.

I can understand the grief and anger of the Cohens. But it is obvious they don't understand the kind of high-level diplomacy required in this fast-changing world.

True, it was only a few months ago that we, as a nation, hated Assad of Syria more than we now hate Saddam of Iraq.

WKEA Chicago Tribune

THE BUTCHER, THE BAKER, THE CAN-DO SHTICK MAKER

In fact, we kind of liked Saddam because he had fought against the late Ayatollah Khomeini of Iran. And we hated the ayatollah even more than we hated Assad or Syria. And before the ayatollah — or maybe at the same time, sometimes it's hard to keep track — we hated Gadhafi of Libya more than just about anybody.

We don't hate Assad as much as we used to because Assad hates Saddam, and anybody who hates Saddam is an OK guy. At least as of today.

But now that we hate Saddam because he is (choose one or more): (a) a naked aggressor, (b) a threat to the world's economic stability, (c) a threat to American jobs and industry, (d) a threat to stability in the Mideast, or (e) a threat to someday build a nuclear bomb. We don't hate Assad as much as we used to because Assad hates Saddam, and anybody who hates Saddam is an OK guy. At least as of today.

But there's always tomorrow. So just because President Bush got together with Assad doesn't mean that he really likes him or that he has forgiven him for encouraging terrorism. But in diplomacy, there is a time and a place for everything. And this wasn't the time for Bush to say: "Hi, there, Assad, blown up any more Pan Am planes lately?" It wouldn't have been good form.

So who knows, if we're patient and the economic blockade against Saddam works, he might back down, fold up or even drop dead, and we won't have to hate him as much anymore. Then Assad might become a naked aggressor or start to build a bomb on the sneak and maybe we can put him back on top of our hate list.

We must learn to take the long view. Many Americans are still alive who fought against China in the Korean War. And for decades, we were in a Cold War with the Soviet Union. But now we are waiting for the Soviets and China, two of the five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council, to give us permission to let our troops fight and die against Iraq.

That shows how things can change. How many GIs in Korea would have believed it if you told them: "Someday, the president of the United States will ask China for permission to send your grandchildren into battle"? You could have gotten very good odds on that one.

So that's why we have to take the long view. Someday, Saddam's children might buy a big Hollywood studio. Stranger things have happened.

Nuclear rhetoric Bush is using nuclear threat to scare public

Cody Shearer
North American Syndicate

WASHINGTON — There are a number of President Bush's close friends here who cringe when the president doesn't think before he speaks. Perhaps his actions are deliberate? A case in point occurred at President Bush's press conference last week.

Asked of his reaction to Sen. Al Gore's claim that he was misleading the public in regard to Iraq's real nuclear threat, President Bush declared he wasn't about "to gamble on the future about the construction of atomic weapons by Saddam Hussein."

For the unknowing, the president sounded sincere. To gain effect, he paused and said, "I know what the intelligence says. Every bit of it. And I can't share it..."

Ever since he visited American troops in Saudi Arabia, President Bush has been emphasizing the imminence of Iraq's nuclear threat. To measure Iraq's timetable in years risked "seriously underestimating... the gravity of the threat," he said.

Of course, the Bush administration is no innocent in deciding to play on the fears of the American people in order to muster support for military action against Iraq. Two recent public opinion polls suggest eliminating Iraq's nuclear potential to be the one cause that the public considers war justifiable.

Independent experts, however, are right in accusing the Bush administration of exaggerating Iraq's nuclear potential to boost domestic support for military action. James Schlesinger, former CIA director and defense secretary said the timing on the part of the Bush White House was "no accident." He claimed at a congressional hearing last week that "we heard relatively little about the urgency of the nuclear threat during the first 16 weeks of the crisis."

Admiral William Crowe, the respected former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff also told Congress last week that "recent reports of near-term (Iraq nuclear development) are not right. They are exaggerated."

Added Leonard Spector of Carnegie Endowment for International Peace: "We're really looking at a sort of resurgence of an appreciation of what was there before in an effort to build this into a bit more of a political factor."

In short, the Bush administration has been beating Iraq's nuclear drum on the basis of a very speculative scenario. The Defense Intelligence Agency now estimates that if Iraq seized about 20 kilograms of high-enriched uranium, presently under International Atomic Energy Administration safeguards at the Tuwaitha Nuclear Research Center near Baghdad, it could make a crude nuclear bomb in less than a year. Last week Secretary of Defense Richard Cheney said that an unsophisticated nuclear device could be manufactured by Iraq if it blended about ten kilograms of uranium enriched to 80 percent U-235 supplied by the USSR with the 12.3 kilograms of 93 percent enriched uranium supplied by France.

Unfortunately, for the Iraqis, the French-supplied uranium is in metal form. The 80 percent enriched uranium is in the form of uranium oxide fuel supplied for a Soviet-design research reactor and would have to be reduced to metal before being mixed with the 93 percent product, if it were to be used in a nuclear explosion.

The bottom line is that Iraq is nowhere near having mastered the process steps necessary to convert uranium concentrate into weapons-grade uranium.

I'm told there is no intelligence available to our government that says Iraq is capable of processing high-enriched uranium into shaped charges, and manufacturing reflectors to minimize the amount of the uranium needed in a charge or performing implosion package testing.

There is also no evidence that Iraq has the technology to minimize the production losses in processing high-enriched uranium into a nuclear weapon. In advanced nuclear weapon states, high-enriched uranium losses number as high as 20 percent during weapons production. Given this fact, Iraq's material processing losses would be enough to make a difference between producing a critical and non-critical weapon with the slim amount of high-powered uranium it now has.

Intelligence officials also tell me that Iraq lacks critical parts to complete any centrifuges, such as corrosion-resistant bearings, as well as the expertise in the field of vacuum technology. Iraqi scientists are simply unable to convert uranium concentrate into uranium hexafluoride feedstock gas for centrifuges.

Regardless of such overwhelming evidence, let's suppose Iraq could soon fabricate a crude nuclear device. It still, in the words of Secretary of Defense Cheney, "wouldn't be anything you could deliver from an airplane." In other words, acquiring a nuclear capability doesn't mean one can target it. What Iraq might have, under the worst-case scenario, is a means to produce fallout of the kind associated with a nuclear reactor accident. Is this sufficient to go to war over? If so, why doesn't this country attack India or Pakistan or Israel?

President Bush ought to be ashamed of himself for playing the nuclear bogeyman card. Exaggerating nuclear fears and whipping up needless nuclear phobia, is not the role of a true leader. If he has facts that refute those of his own experts, he ought to place them on the table.

Perhaps the late British writer, John Ruskin, described Bush's self-defense posture best in his 1856 book, "Modern Painters." "The essence of lying is in deception," he writes, "not in words; a lie may be told in silence, by equivocation, by the accent on a syllable, by a glance of the eye attaching a peculiar significance to a sentence; but all of these kinds of lies are worse and based by many degrees than a lie plainly worded."

Males and females have a war gap between them

Ellen Goodman
Washington Post Writers Group

BOSTON — In 1925, a handful of years after American women had won the right to vote, a rear admiral in the U. S. Navy expressed his anxiety about their "seemingly insatiable desire to interfere in matters they do not understand."

"War," said Adm. Fiske, "they understand least and from it they instinctively recoil. There is danger in this situation. Women now have the vote and they outnumber the men... In spite of themselves we must protect the ladies!"

As it turned out, the admiral needn't have worried his pretty little head about the ladies. In the fight for suffrage, many had argued that women voters would usher in a millennium of peace. But when military push came to shove in the 20th century, women and men expressed very similar attitudes toward war and peace. That is, until now.

This fall, a vast and deep gender gap has been unearthed in the Persian Gulf. Differences about the use of force had already formed a slight trench over Grenada and Panama. But now they are close to a chasm.

In one poll, 73 percent of women say they oppose a war to liberate Kuwait. Only 48 percent of men concur. That's a margin of 25 points. In another poll, women are 18 points less likely than men to believe that Bush has tried hard enough to use diplomacy.

Polls are finding gender gaps of 18, 19, 24 and 25 points. Today American women are working side by side with men from Saudi Arabia to Sioux Falls. But their views are diverging.

It is possible, of course, that the pollsters are just tracking a new willingness among women to say what they always thought. There is hard evidence that women are no longer reluctant to speak out in disagreement with the men in their lives. They have gained the courage of their convictions.

But the more interesting questions are about the origin of these convictions. Why do women seem to be less directed toward war — or at least toward this war at this moment? Is it the isolationism that seems particularly acute among older women and those with young children? There is a tendency among women, for better and for worse, to keep their focus close to home.

*Today American women are working side by side with men from Saudi Arabia to Sioux Falls. But their views

Is it the simple pop-female explanation that Woman the Nurturer is innately opposed to violence? That smacks of the old admiral's notion that women "instinctively recoil" from war and the lingering image of woman as peacekeeper. I don't see instinct on this battlefield of ideas. But there is surely rebellion at the thought of sending a child into battle. What then about the official feminist explanation that we oppose this war because, as NOW's Molly Yard said, "Saudi Arabia and Kuwait are despotic, clan-run monarchies" guilty of gender apartheid. The argument seems almost cartoon-like in its simplicity. Yet questions about human rights are part of the larger doubt about the worth of this enterprise and these allies.

And what of the possibility that women are more reluctant to start a fight because of different experiences with conflict? In our daily childhood conflicts on playgrounds and in homes, do men learn they must confront a bully while women learn they can only maintain peace through negotiating? Such separate truths become part of a world view.

Any analysis of a gender gap risks a gender stereotype. There are men and women all across this war-peace spectrum, but the differences are now real. And strikingly little is known about the reasons.

As an amateur geologist sifting through this terrain, I see bits and pieces of all these reasons and add another. Men and women may assess risk differently. Men often see more danger in inaction; women in action. Men often think about winning; women about hurting. Surely the President's sudden emphasis on Iraq's atomic bomb potential is an attempt to make inaction seem more dangerous, to change the direction of the worry.

The old admiral said that wars were made to comfort and protect women even against their will. This week, a different sort of admiral, William Crowe, former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told the Congress, "War is not neat, it's not tidy, and when you resort to it, it's uncertain and it's a mess."

The image from the polls is not of women as pacifists, but as wary citizens who require more and better reasons for war, who accept war only as the truly last resort. If that is true, perhaps we are not splitting from men, but leading them.

ASU freshman, musician battles with cancer

By LAURA SCHMIDT
State Press

ASU student Christy Dillon said most students find it hard to believe she has been battling brain cancer for four years.

"I tell people what I've been through," said Dillon, an ASU 19-year-old freshman music theory major. "I look totally normal. I like to talk about it.

"You tell people, and they don't know how serious it is."

Dillon said she can prove her cancer experience to friends by showing them a small, permanent bald spot on the lower right side of her head underneath her hair.

"It's my proof of seal," she said.

Five years before Dillon realized she had brain cancer, she suffered petit maul seizures, tingling sensations in her left arm, severe headaches and vomiting from "feelings" or dream-like flashbacks. She said her seizures became worse as her cancer developed.

"My dad thought it was migraines," she said. "I never told my parents. If it's not known, people will think you're crazy."

Dillon was diagnosed with glioblastoma, a brain tumor, in the right hemisphere of her brain when she was 15 years old. She said the tumor affected her memory, pituitary gland and right eyesight.

"It was really shocking," she said. "I wouldn't cry in front of my parents. I just couldn't cry in front of my mom. She was already having a nervous breakdown.

"I would cry at night."
But Dillon said her tumor was operable because it was not weaved into her brain or located in a sensitive area. A surgeon in Las Vegas, where she lived for 10 years, removed her "lemon-size" tumor and prescribed one year of chemotherapy and six weeks of radiation treatments.

Dillon said after she recovered in the intensive care unit, her doctors told her the tumor was diseased instead of cancerous.

"I wasn't aware of cancer," she said. "I was only 15. They didn't want to tell me. They wanted me to ask them."

Dillon, an avid violin player for eight years, accepted a music scholarship this year from ASU Symphony Conductor Henry Charles Smith, to perform with the University Chamber Orchestra. She also received a scholarship of $500 per semester from the Candlelighters Cancer Organization in Las Vegas.

Dillon said she struggled for acceptance into ASU because she had low grades in high school during her treatments.

"I used to get A's and B's in 7th grade," she said. "Now I study extra hard, and when I get to the test I forget. I wanted to be a veterinarian but I know I can't."

Dillon said her tumor and radiation treatments have slightly affected her memory and interest in music, but she can master her part-time waitressing job at Swensen's Ice cream Parlor by writing orders down on paper.

"I used to practice (violin) three hours a day, and now I just get by," she added.

But Smith said Dillon performs as well as other members of the orchestra.

Irwin Daugherty/State Press

Christy Dillon, a 19-year-old freshman music theory major, has been battling brain cancer for four years.

"Everyone has to play hard," he said.

Frank Spinosa, director of the ASU Chamber Orchestra, said he did not know Dillon suffered brain cancer when she asked him to play in his orchestra.

"She's doing very well," he said. "She doesn't stick out at all. She fits in the organization just smoothly."

Dillon said she receives EEG's, brain wave tests, and magnetic X-rays that do not interfere with her existing radiation in Las Vegas every six months to ensure that new brain tumors will not occur.

"If (doctors) catch (cancer) on time, it won't be as bad," she said. "Now I'm more aware that I've had this problem, so I know what to look for. I think I'm cured, to tell you the truth. But (doctors) have to wait 10 years."

Police Report

ASU police reported the following incidents Wednesday:

- An ASU student was arrested, cited and released for criminal trespassing at the University Activity Center.
- An ASU student's 1988 Nissan Sentra was damaged and several items were stolen from it while it was parked in Parking Area 17. Estimated damage is $650, and estimated loss is $390.

- A woman not affiliated with ASU was arrested and charged with theft, criminal damage and possession of marijuana and drug paraphernalia while she was at the northwest corner of Parking Area 59.

Tempe police reported the following incidents Wednesday:

- A 15-year-old girl was sexually assaulted after the M. C. Hammer concert at the University Activity Center Monday night. After the concert, she and a friend accepted a ride home with a T-shirt vendor. After one friend was dropped off at her home, the suspect allegedly took the victim to his room at the Vagabond Inn, 1221 E. Apache Blvd., and forced her to have sexual intercourse with him. After the assault, the suspect gave the girl $50.

The victim called her mother, and she was taken to the Maricopa Medical Center. Police later arrested the suspect at his motel room.

- An ASU student's Pontiac Firebird was stolen from her residence in the 1400 block of East Apache Boulevard. Police later found it abandoned near the railroad tracks on Price Road.
- A 23-year-old ASU student said she was assaulted by her former live-in boyfriend. He allegedly grabbed her throat and knocked her head into the wall several times.

Plan

Academic Affairs, Business Affairs, Student Affairs, Research, University Relations, Intercollegiate Athletics and the city.

Ignacio Bunster-Ossa, managing director for Wallace Roberts and Todd, the master plan consultant, said the plan includes aspects ranging from aesthetic concerns to bike paths.

Ossa compared the look of ASU to an "oasis" because of the campus' many trees and waterfalls amidst a desert climate. He explained that the master plan guides future developments on campus to maintain the oasis effect.

Ossa also said ASU's malls are an important link between the University and Tempe.

"The malls themselves were once (Tempe) streets — repaved — they have become an important part of the city itself and are keeping the city alive within ASU," he said.

Mathew Betz, vice provost for Planning, said ASU hasn't had a comprehensive plan since the mid-1960's, adding that ASU's new administration felt it was "time to look toward the future."

Betz said a new site for a liberal arts building, mall development and the fact that ASU is 1 million square feet short of campus space now, pointed to the need for a master plan.

Jennus Burton, associate vice president for Business Affairs, assured community members the master plan would not be a waste of ASU money.

"The master plan is a set of guidelines — not a law or an ordinance. It will not be put on a shelf and ignored," Burton said.

A meeting to review plan alternatives will be held Feb. 5, and the formal presentation of the master plan will be held on April 16.

Rally

today that these groups have attempted many times to open dialogue with the State Press and that these requests have been ignored.

"But this is the first time that I've heard anything from them."

Mario Diaz, a representative from the Chicano-Hispano Coalition, said non-white students deserve respect from the University and from the newspaper.

"We are not a minority to any group," he said. "What we are is grossly underrepresented at Arizona State University."

Diaz told the State Press editors who attended the rally that the coalitions are willing to join them to create a cultural diversity section in the paper.

Ashahed Triche, who represents the Afro-American Coalition, said it is through toleration and respect that cooperation is born.

Michael Lane, a representative from the American Indian Council, said the State Press has an obligation to print news on cultural diversity issues because it is the mouthpiece of the University.

And if the demands are not met, Andy Ortiz, a member of the Chicano-Hispano coalition, said "it will be a sad day for the State Press."

Leon Shell, associate vice president for Student Affairs, attended the rally and said the University is concerned when the students, who are the primary recipients of the cultural diversity programs, are not satisfied.

"There have been high expectations associated with the idea of (a cultural diversity program) at ASU," Shell said, adding that the faculty, staff and students working for cultural diversity have been well-intentioned.

He said the program may not be working as well as was hoped, but "the University is well-prepared and willing to work out any problems."

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nuclear power industry is having a meltdown over "The Simpsons."

The prime-time cartoon show's evil power-plant owner with overbite, the dozing employees and a three-eyed fish named Blinky all have contributed to driving industry officials into a critical mass. But more than anything, Homer Simpson has them glowing under the collar.

The U. S. Council for Energy Awareness, an industry information group, told the "Simpsons" producers in a February letter it was horrified to see nuclear plant workers portrayed as "bungling idiots."

Top "idiot" on the council's list was Homer, father of the Simpson family and an employee of the fictitious Springfield nuclear plant. Homer, perpetually in need of a shave, seems to care less about safety than about naps, doughnuts and having enough tartar sauce for his fish sticks.

In various episodes, Homer gives away the plant's blueprints to a foreign exchange student, his boss tries to bribe a plant inspector with a bushel of cash, and three-eyed "Blinky" is found swimming near the plant.

"I am sorry that the "Simpsons" has offended a lot of people in the energy industry," Executive Producer Sam Simon said in a Feb. 5 letter to Carl Goldstein, a vice president of energy group. "I agree with you that in real life Homer Simpson would not be employed at a nuclear power plant."

ASU's about-face beats UNM, 59-54

By PAUL CORO
State Press

We have a winner in the UofA football team lookalike contest.

Only the Wildcats could lose to Oregon State and then win against USC. And perhaps only the ASU basketball team could get beat by Drake and rebound like it did Wednesday night to hand 28th-ranked New Mexico its first loss, 59-54, in front of a University Activity Center crowd of 9,132.

"I'm proud of my kids because we had a lot of work to do since Saturday and they did what I asked them to do and that's to their credit," Sun Devil coach Bill Frieder said.

Once again, streak-happy ASU (4-1) ran hot and cold until center Isaac Austin poured it on the Lobos' highly-touted Luc Longley with 17 second-half points and denial defense to wash out his teammates' dismal 35 percent shooting.

While he was timid offensively in the first half with just two points on the 7-foot-2 Australian, Austin began to use his quickness in the key to bring back the Sun Devils from a sluggish second-half start. In one stretch, Austin was responsible for 14 straight ASU points by his buckets or assists.

"We went into Ike at the right time in the second half and he responded," Frieder said.

"I thought he was a little scared of the size and so forth (early). We finally got him to take it at him and that was important."

While he was racking up the points and getting Longley into foul trouble on offense, Austin was holding Longley to just seven shots and 10 points on the night by fronting him on defense.

"We had some second and third options of how we were going to (stop Longley), but we didn't have to go to them," Frieder said. "We continued to front him and get weakside help without getting away from their 3-point shooters."

"I felt that I was quicker than him and that helped me," Austin said. "I was just playing smarter than him in the second half."

The Sun Devils began the second half with what has become a typical drought. After holding a 26-23 halftime advantage, ASU did not score on its first five possessions, which dating back to a horrendous first-half conclusion gave the Sun Devils just one field goal in over 12 minutes.

"We go into the tank, there's no question," Frieder said.

"We've got to work that out. The most important part of a game is the first five minutes of the second half."

With Austin's dominance on the post, ASU opened up a 50-43 lead with 7:24 to go when Austin faked Longley into the air and scored on a reverse. However, with the Sun Devils' 55 percent foul shooting, UNM (5-1) rallied as Ike Williams scored seven of its next nine to pull the margin within one in the last minute.

After guard Stevin Smith gave ASU a 57-54 lead with a reverse layup, the Lobos had a shot to tie but Randy Robbins' 3-pointer with 25 seconds left slid in and out and Sun Devil guard Tarence Wheeler cinched the win

Longley fails to meet tall expectations

By DARREN URBAN
State Press

Luc Longley, New Mexico's 7-foot-2 center, was predicted by some experts to have been a lottery pick if he had gone into the NBA draft after his junior campaign.

But Longley stayed in school, and through the first five games of the season, blistered Lobo opponents with 15.2 points and 9.8 rebounds a game, shooting a remarkable 75 percent from the field.

Even Sports Illustrated's Curry Kirkpatrick was in town for a feature on the Perth, Australia, native.

But Kirkpatrick and the 9,132 fans who watched Wednesday night did not see a dominating big man. In fact, Longley was mostly a non-factor in a 59-54 UNM loss to ASU. Taking only one shot in the first half, he finished with 10 points on four-of-seven shooting, reaching the foul line only twice.

"I didn't get the ball in the low post," Longley said. "But other people had better shots."

The Sun Devils' game plan was for center Isaac Austin to front Longley and to bring in backside help on the entry pass. The strategy shut the Lobos' big man down in the first half. Not only did Longley shoot just once, but he only received the ball five times.

"I wasn't scared," Austin said. "I've played against big guys."

Longley, who finished with two assists, did make some good passes when confronted with the double team. But his Lobo teammates could not convert on several makeable shots.

UNM began looking for Longley more in the beginning of the second half. In the initial 10 minutes, Longley buried two foul shots, two dunks and a spinning layup as Austin began playing him without help.

"In the second half, ASU was respecting our outside shooters more," Longley said. "I had more room to operate inside."

But Austin was having his way with Longley on the Sun Devils' offensive end, finishing with 17 points and 12 free-throw attempts in the second half. With Longley trying to concentrate on stopping Austin, he was unable to sustain his offensive momentum, missing his only shot in the final 10 minutes of the game. His only significant contribution down the stretch was a block of Austin's shot with ASU ahead 50-45, but it was not enough to spark the Lobos.

"We're not moving the ball around enough," Longley said. "It's part good defense, but it's part bad concentration on our part."

As for the Sun Devils, two backup plans to stop Longley did not have to be used because of the stellar defensive play of Austin and his supporting cast.

"I just wanted to play good defense," Austin said. "He deserves the ranking he's

SAE Lions down Sigma Chi to earn bid to USF&G Sugar Bowl

By DARREN URBAN
State Press

There is a winning football team that regularly reaches postseason play at ASU.

The Sig Alpha Lions, of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity, have lost only once in two-and-a-half years — in last year's USF&G Sugar Bowl Flag Football Championship Tournament.

Taking their first step back to try and capture the national crown, the Lions beat a team from Sigma Chi Fraternity, 6-0, Tuesday to earn a return trip to New Orleans.

"We're going down there knowing we are one of the better teams," said tailback/safety Steven Dark, a 22-year-old communications major. "We weren't sure what to expect last season, but now we know we can win it."

Last season, the Lions won four games in the tourney, including a win against the previous year's runner-ups.

Dark said the team, which has played together for the entire string of victories, is unique in the seven-on-seven sport.

"We play both offense and defense, unlike other teams that sub a lot," Dark said. "It keeps us tight to be out there the time. Since we have played together all this time, we know where everyone else is on the field."

Dark said this trip to New Orleans will be all business for the Lions, who Dark said fell prey to "social life" during last year's tournament.

"We're going to put the social aspect aside," Dark said. "We're going to concentrate on winning and then celebrate later."

"We're going down there to win it," offensive lineman/linebacker Rob Slattery said. "We know what to expect."

Sig Alpha did come away with one major win in New Orleans last year, collecting "approximately $8,300" for the Cure

The Sig Alpha Lions, ASU's two-time intramural football champions, will travel to New Orleans for a national tourney.

Paralysis fund to finish first in the fundraising competition. Dark said although the team had gotten off to a late start this year, they hope to repeat as fundraising champions.

"Last year we donated our plane tickets (to New Orleans) into our total," Dark said. "It put us over the top, and as the winners, USF&G paid for our trip and hotel."

Dark said after watching the national tournament, ASU ranks high in producing quality flag football squads.

"Looking at our performance, I think it really shows how strong the ASU intramural program is," Dark said. "The Sigma Chis have a great team. The breaks went our way, but they could compete down in New Orleans."

Dark said flag football is more difficult and more intense than people realize.

"It is very complex," Dark said. "You need to use your sense of football, and adapt it to flag football rules."

In addition, Dark said the Lions use a different style of offense that throws teams off.

"Our offense is geared around running and dump passes," Dark said. "Most teams use a spread offense with two quarterbacks."

The other members of the eight-man roster are: offensive lineman/cornerback Rick Landry, quarterback/linebacker Tim Booker, receiver/defensive lineman Jon Dice, center/defensive lineman Dan Siddell, receiver/defensive back Jeff Nuzem and receiver/defensive back Jason Radoven.

LaDuke picked on all-American team

From staff and wire reports

ASU senior free safety Nathan LaDuke was named a second-team All-American Wednesday, making him the lone Sun Devil representative on this year's three all-America squads.

LaDuke, who led ASU in tackles and interceptions this season, is also a semifinalist for the Thorpe Award, which goes to the nation's top collegiate defensive back.

Besides LaDuke, eight other Pac-10 players received recognition on the squad, but only UofA's Darryl Lewis represented the conference on the first team.

with two free throws.

"The key to the game was when we were five points ahead, then we got a turnover and then we started letting Austin fill the middle," UNM coach Dave Bliss said. "I'm not taking anything away from the way Austin played, but that was their whole offense in the second half."

"We're cutting down on mistakes and we're learning," ASU point guard Lynn Collins said. "Once you stop learning, you're in for it. When we lost Sautrday, everybody had to come back and say we're still learning. Tonight was a good win to get everybody's confidence back up."

The Sun Devils, who suffered against Drake because of hurried shots and tempo, came out with a deliberate offense that was reminiscent of last year's monotony. After falling back 7-5, ASU scored on eight of its next nine possessions for a 21-7 bulge midway through the first half. The Sun Devils then slipped into their scoring rut.

"I thought they were tight in the first half a little, especially the last seven or eight minutes," Frieder said. "I think we're trying too hard to play team basketball and find open people. We stopped playing with reckless abandon which you have to do."

Some of the first-half scoring blues could be attributed to Austin, who passed up shooting on the post against Longley on several occasions while ASU missed two-thirds of their shots from the field.

"I wasn't nervous," Austin said. "I had to think about my game. I wasn't thinking about him."

got. He's a very talented player."

"I knew (Austin) was good," Longley said. "He played a great game. The credit goes to him."

Longley finished with seven rebounds, but none of them came on the offensive end. He was in position to grab teammate Rob Robbins in-and-out 3-pointer with 35 seconds left, but the ball bounced off Longley's hands, and with it, the game.

Longley said after the game that the attention he receives from the media has not been a distraction.

"(The media coverage) has been less than usual," Longley said. "We have a lot of new faces for the media to talk to. I don't dislike it. It's been a pleasant surprise."
